THE THREE HOMES.

Where is my home? I asked a child Who, in the morning air,
Was twining flowers most sweet and mild
In garlands for her hair.
My home, the happy heart replied,
And smiled in childish glee.
Is on the sunny mountain-side,
Where soft winds wander free.
Oh! blessings fall on artless youth,
And all its rosy hours.
When every word is joy and truth,
And treasures live in flowers.

Where is thy home? I asked of one Who bent with flushing face
To hear a warrior's tender tale
In the wild wood's secret place.
She spoke not, but her varying cheek
The tale might well impart.
The home of her young spirit meek
Was in a kindred heart.
Ah! souls that well might soar above,
To earth will fondly cling.
And build their hopes on human love,
That light and fragile thing!

Where is thy home, thou lonely man?
I asked a pilgrim gray,
Who came, with furrowed brow and wan,
Slow musing on his way.
He paused, and with a solemn mien, Upturned his holy eyes:
The land I seek thou ne'er hast seen—
My home is in the skies!
Oh! bless—thrice bless, the heart most true
To whom such thoughts are given,
That walks from worldly fetters free:
Its only home is heaven!

THE MISSING RING.

Albert Burton was a wealthy ba-and lived in the pleasant city of A in the State of New York. At the of our narrative he was in the prin-life, having just entered his forty year. His manners were easy and sant, but, at times, he exhibited a siveness that rendered him quite rep-to those who came within the circle influence.

Although wealthy, Mr. Burton had many hours in sadness. It is true he possessed the means wherewith to dodge in worldly pleasures; and, to from appearances, he seldom denied self of that which his heart desired. residence was furnished in the most nificent style; the apartments filled with costly furniture, and walls adorned with beautiful pic-his gardens were replete with the fume of a thousand flowers. If terropleasures can drive away sorrow trouble, Mr. Burton would have ena state of perfect happiness. We meagre in the enjoyment of life, an endeavor to dispel care from the soul unless the spirit be free from the stof sorrow and guilt, our happiness is incomplete.

People often wondered why Mr. B appeared so sorrowful at times; but could gaze into his soul—into the h secrets of his life. Could they have

Mr. Burton presented a fine perportioned, with a finely shaped head was of a rich chestnut color.

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs,

ST. MARK, P. O., 501 E. 12, 1875.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CON STITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty nine years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four dif ferent doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe sore ness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I com menced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bot tle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bot tles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chop ping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I at tribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.

filled with costly furniture, and the

His horses and carriages were the fine his gardens were redolent with the per fume of a thousand flowers. If terrestrial pleasures can drive away sorrow trouble, Mr. Burton would have enjoyed a state of perfect happiness. We in mingle in the enjoyments of life, and e deavor to dispel care from the soul; b unless the spirit be free from the strai of sorrow and guilt, our happiness will be incomplete.

People often wondered why Mr. Bart appeared so sorrowful at times; but no could gaze into his soul—in the hidden secrets of his life. Could they have do so, they would have ceased to wonder.
Even his intimate friends knew not the source of his heart's sorrow. What ev had occasioned his sadness had occur many years since, and it had remained secret even from his own family.

Mr. Burton presented a fine person appearance. He was tall and well pr portioned, with a finely shaped head. H eyes were of deep azure, and his hair lig in color. His deportment was graceful there was nothing inelegant in his action or manners. He was usually dressed faultless attire, yet there was nothing his appearance that betokened vanity neither did he possess any of that haugh ness which characterizes the disposition of many in his station of life. The ri and the poor alike received from him the same cordial treatment.

Somewhat different from her father nature, yet similar to him in many re spects, was Annie Burton. Her soul w replete with happiness. Her beauty w of a spiritual order, as if borrowed fr the angels of heaven; there was a char about her that bespoke a cheerful natu
She had arrived at the age of eightee years, and was now acknowledged to the bell of A—. Her eyes were dar with a soft angelic expression. Her ha hung in glossy curls down her shoulder her forehead was full and noble lookin and her lips were like the red rose of summer. But it was her gentle dispo sition more than her outward beauty th won for her the love of others. She w like a ray of sunshine—the personificati of goodness itself.

Her winning ways and attractive ma ners had gained for her the attentions many a young gentleman. There were those who adored her on account of h father's wealth; there were those wh worshiped her for her beauty; but the
was one who loved her for her own tr self; who, had she walked in the humil paths of life, would have thought not the loss of her. He loved her for th purity of her spirit, not for the sord dross that is too often the incentive adoration.

Annie Burton gave no encouragement to her lovers, with one exception. Sh detested flirtation, and trifled with a man's heart. In vain her suitors plead with her to share her future life wi them; she had kindly, yet firmly, refus their solicitations.

There was one whom she truly loved it was he who worshipped her for her o self. To him she gave her heart, and cherished it as a treasure.

It was a beautiful day in June wh Annie Burton left her father's house take a walk outside of the city. The d was lovely; the soft, silvery sky and t verdant earth were adorned with the m low sunlight. The birds sang sweetly the air and on the trees; the winds, they floated softly over the land, bore t perfume of countless flowers. It seem a relief to emerge from the tumult the city, and breathe the invigorating of the rural districts.

As she was walking slowly along, a m sprang over a fence at the side of t road, and came toward her. He wa plainly dressed, yet with scrupulo neatness. He was one of those perso to whom one is strangely attracted first sight. There was an expressi resting in his calm, blue eyes that w the index to a kindly disposition; yet lacked neither courage nor firmness.

same cordial treatment.
Somewhat different from her father in nature, yet similar to him in many respects, was Annie Burton. Her soul was replete with happiness. Her beauty was of a spiritual order, as if borrowed from the angels of heaven; there was a charm about her that bespoke a cheerful nature.
She had arrived at the age of eighteen years, and was now acknowledged to be the bell of A—. Her eyes were dark with a soft angelic expression. Her hair hung in glossy curls down her shoulders;
her forehead was full and noble looking
and her lips were like the red rose of summer. But it was her gentle disposition more than her outward beauty that won for her the love of others. She was like a ray of sunshine—the personification
of goodness itself.
Her winning ways and attractive manners had gained for her the attentions of many a young gentleman. There were those who adored her on account of her father's wealth; there were those who worshiped her for her beauty; but there was one who loved her for her lowly tri-self; who, had she walked in the humble paths of life, would have thought none the loss of her. He loved her for the purity of her spirit, not for the sordid dross that is too often the incentive to adoration.

Annie Burton gave no encouragement to her lovers, with one exception. She detested flattery, and trifled with no man's heart. In vain her suitors pleaded with her to share her future life with them; she had kindly, yet firmly, refused
their solicitations.

There was one whom she truly loved it was he who worshipped her for her own self. To him she gave her heart, and he cherished it as a treasure.
It was a beautiful day in June when Annie Burton left her father's house to take a walk outside of the city. The day was lovely; the soft, silvery sky and the verdant earth were adorned with the mellow sunlight. The birds sang sweetly in the air and on the trees; the winds, as they floated softly over the land, bore the perfume of countless flowers. It seemed a relief to emerge from the tumult of the city, and breathe the invigorating air
of the rural districts.

As she was walking slowly along, a man sprang over a fence at the side of the road, and came toward her. He was plainly dressed, yet with scrupulous neatness. He was one of those persons to whom one is strangely attracted at first sight. There was an expression resting in his calm, blue eyes that was the index to a kindly disposition; yet he lacked neither courage nor firmness.

The meeting between Will Clayton—for such was the new arrival's name—and Annie Burton was marked by deep feeling. It was plainly evident, judging from the demonstration of affection that was displayed in their greetings toward each other, that their hearts were united with bonds more stronger than those of mere friendship.

Before Will had seen Annie that day
he had been rambling in the woods and meadows, and was now on his way toward the city; but since he had met her, all desire to return vanished, and accordingly, he walked slowly along by her side. She did not regret his presence—in fact, she esteemed it to be a deep pleasure to be near him.

Like his fair companion, Will Clayton possessed a taste for the beautiful in nature. His soul was full of the poetry of life. He delighted in the charming influence that emanates from mossy dell and refreshing groves.

Not far from the city of A— is situated a pretty lake. Towards this body of water our friends wended their way. In a little while they arrived near it, and sat down on its grassy banks.
"Annie," said her lover, as he gazed on the silvery water before him, "what beautiful world this is at some times!"
"Is it not always so?" she said, gazing at him. "It is something in ourselves that makes it seem gloomy. If we are unhappy, all around us will look dark

NAPANEE, ONT., FRIDAY, JUNE 8 1877.

When I wrote the other day about the modern passion for gambling I might have added something about the gambling that is constantly going on here outside of the clubs. There are no greater gamblers in the world than those who stake their money every day upon the Bourse, or upon the Petit Bourse during the evening. And the passion is not a whit less strong among the people who invest their small economies in stocks of various sorts. All try to get something to which a lottery is attached. There are semi-annual drawings to the Paris loans, and a number of prizes. In the first place, the lucky number gets 150,000 francs or about 200,000 francs according to the date of the loan; there is a smaller prize of 50,000 francs, several 1,000 francs, and a series of numbers are drawn to be paid off at their par value of the bonds. The Turkish loan has a drawing also, and a grand prize of 600,000 francs. Last year this was drawn by a man in Trieste, who came on here to negotiate it. As the Turks do not pay interest on their bonds, he had doubts about their paying the prizes drawn in their lottery, but he finally got some bankers to take it at 500,000 francs, giving $20,000 by way of discount. The Russian prize amounts to 200,000 roubles. All of these loans are popular, (save the Ottoman at this time,) for all who invest hope to draw a prize, and in addition to their interest they have the excitement attendant upon investment in a lottery. A curious case has just come before one of our tribunals, growing out of one of these drawings. Three years ago a Russian lady came to Paris and took rooms at the Byron Hotel, where she was very well received. She was a lady of a certain age, pretending to be a Countess and the wife of a General stationed in the Caucasus. She had money, and lived in style. In a very short time she took a fancy to the lady cashier of the hotel, and the two became exceedingly intimate. The cashier was an unmarried lady of thirty odd, who was dreaming of ultimate marriage, and was saving her money to buy her trousseau when the fortunate being who was to be her husband should chance along. She had waited years for him, but every year added something to her wealth, and made her more and more an object to be desired. She confined all this to the Russian lady, who gave her encouragement and hope, and the two spent many an hour together, talking over the matter. Naturally the ne possessed the means whereby to indulge in worldly pleasures; and, to judge from appearances, he seldom denied himself of that which his heart desired. His residence was furnished in the most magnificent style; the apartments were filled with costly furniture, and the walls adorned with beautiful pictures.

His horses and carriages were the finest in the country; and in the floral seasons
his gardens were redolent with the perfume of a thousand flowers. If terrestrial pleasures can drive away sorrow or trouble, Mr. Burton would have enjoyed a state of perfect happiness. We may mingle in the enjoyments of life, and endeavor to dispel care from the soul; but unless the spirit be free from the strains of sorrow and guilt, our happiness will be incomplete.

People often wondered why Mr. Burton appeared so sorrowful at times; but none could gaze into his soul—into the hidden secrets of his life. Could they have done so, they would have ceased to wonder.
Even his intimate friends knew not the source of his heart's sorrow. Whatever had occasioned his sadness had occurred many years since, and it had remained a secret even from his own family.

Mr. Burton presented a fine personal appearance. He was tall and well proportioned, with a finely shaped head. His eyes were of deep azure, and his hair light in color. His deportment was graceful; there was nothing inelegant in his actions or manners. He was usually dressed in faultless attire, yet there was nothing in his appearance that betokened vanity;
neither did he possess any of that haughtiness which characterizes the disposition of many in his station of life. The rich and the poor alike received from him the
same cordial treatment.

Somewhat different from her father in nature, yet similar to him in many respects, was Annie Burton. Her soul was Alf Walton. He is villain, and his companion bears no better appearance. I warrant that they are not together for any good purpose."

He followed them with noiseless steps.
An Indian would not have experienced greater care in pursuing a trail. Presently they sat down by the trunk of a large tree. Cautiously, Will Clayton neared them; he finally reached a tree near where the men were sitting; prudence withheld him from advancing nearer.

"You are duces fortunate, Alf, in having such a hold on Burton," Will Clayton heard one of the men say to his companion. "Of course Miss Annie cannot refuse to marry you when she learns that her father is in your power."

Will Clayton's eyes sparkled with rage when he heard the name of Annie Burton mentioned.

"Certainly not," said Alf Walton; "a few words on my part would send him either to the gallows or States Prison."

The two men arose, shortly afterward, and walked away.

"I shall frustrate Alf Walton's plans if it lies in my power," thought Will Clayton, as he stopped from his place of concealment and wended his way toward home.

CHAPTER II.

On the following morning, when Annie Burton entered the dining room, her mother noticed a troubled expression on her daughter's face.

After breakfast was finished, the latter retired to her room, and began to search the apartment.

"It is strange where that ring has gone," she said in a low tone; "I am certain that I put it on the shelf last Saturday, and now it is missing." And she resumed her search with greater zeal, but with the same unavailable result.

It was this loss that had caused the troubled expression that Mrs. Burton noticed resting on her daughter's face. It was not so much on account of the value of the ring that she so deeply regretted its loss; but she greatly prized it as a present from an aunt of hers who had been dead several years.

She resolved at present, however, to mention to no one anything in regard to it, but to wait a while. In vain she strove to banish all thoughts relating to the ring from her mind; her appreciation of her aunt's kindness forbade her from so doing.

That evening, as Mr. Burton sat alone in his room, engaged in reading, he was aroused by the quick ringing of the bell in the main hall. Laying his paper on a table at his side, he arose and went to answer the summons.

"Mr. Burton, I believe?" said a voice at the door.

"That is my name," replied the banker.

"I should like to see you in private a few moments," said the man.

"Walk in." And, as he spoke, Mr. Burton led the way to the parlor, and offered the stranger a rest.

"My name is Walton," said the new arrival, sitting down; "I am from Cleveland. Perhaps you remember me."

Mr. Burton's face assumed an ashy paleness as the man spoke.

"Well, sir, what do you want?" he asked, endeavoring to assume a haughty appearance.

"What do I want?" replied the man, in a sarcastic tone. "Well, there are many things that I would like to have.
I have come here this evening on business—not alone financially, but matrimonially. To come to the point—but are we alone in the house?"

"Yes, there is no one here but ourselves," said Mr. Burton.

"Well," resumed Walton, "in the first place, I have taken a fancy to your daughter, and I have come here to ask you if you'll use your influence in persuading her to become my wife."

"My daughter?" cried the banker.

"No, sir, never!"

Russian prize amounts to 200,000 roubles All of these loans are popular, (save the Ottoman at this time,) for all who invest hope to draw a prize, and in addition to their interest they have the excitement attendant upon investment in a lottery.
A curious case has just come before one of our tribunals, growing out of one of these drawings. Three years ago a Russian lady came to Paris and took rooms at the Byron Hotel, where she was very well received. She was a lady of a certain age, pretending to be a Countess and the wife of a General stationed in the Caucasus. She had money, and lived in style. In a very short time she took a fancy to the lady cashier of the hotel, and the two became exceedingly intimate.
The cashier was an unmarried lady of thirty odd, who was dreaming of ultimate marriage, and was saving her money to buy her trousseau when the fortunate being who was to be her husband should chance along. She had waited years for him, but every year added something to her wealth, and made her more and more an object to be desired. She confided all this to the Russian lady, who gave her encouragement and hope, and the two spent many an hour together, talking over the matter. Naturally, the grande dame was informed of the economies laid aside for the marriage settlement.

As time wore on the cashier saw the lady's bills paid with less regularity, and dunning letters became frequent. Finally she began to borrow from her "dear friend," the cashier. One day she pretended to have received an order from her husband to return at once to Russia, but lacked the 500 francs necessary for the voyage. She borrowed this sum from her friend, giving her a 500 rouble bond to cover this and other sums, promising to redeem it in six months.
This period covered the annual drawing.
The time came, and the bond did not draw a prize. The cashier then wrote for her money, and in reply received an authorization to sell this bond. On reflection, she concluded to keep it herself.
A year rolled by, and at the next drawing this identical bond drew the grand prize of 200,000 roubles. The dreams of the cashier were now more than realized, so far as money went, for she had never gone so far as to fancy herself the possessor of $75,000. She went to the proper place, showed the title, and received that sum in solid French money.
But she had scarcely deposited it in the Bank of France in her own name when the Russian lady came on to claim her bond and the 200,000 roubles. She pre-

same cordial treatment.

Somewhat different from her father in nature, yet similar to him in many respects, was Annie Burton. Her soul was replete with happiness. Her beauty was
of a spiritual order, as if borrowed from
the angels of heaven; there was a charm
about her that bespoke a cheerful nature.

She had arrived at the age of eighteen
years, and was now acknowledged to be the bell of A—. Her eyes were dark,
with a soft, angelic expression. Her hair hung in glossy curls down her shoulders;
her forehead was full and noble looking,
and her lips were like the red rose of
summer. But it was her gentle disposition more than her outward beauty that
won for her the love of others. She was like a ray of sunshine—the personification
of goodness itself.

Her winning ways and attractive manners had gained for her the attentions of many a young gentleman. There were
those who adored her on account of her father's wealth; there were those who
worshiped her for her beauty; but there was one who loved her for her own tri-e self; who, had she walked in the humble paths of life, would have thought none the less of her. He loved her for the purity of her spirit, not for the sordid dross that is too often the incentive to adoration.

Annie Burton gave no encouragement
to her lovers, with one exception. She detested flattery, and trifled with no man's heart. In vain her suitors pleaded with her to share her future life with
them; she had kindly, yet firmly, refused
their solicitations.

There was one whom she truly loved;
it was he who worshiped her for her own self. To him she gave her heart, and he cherished it as a treasure.

It was a beautiful day in June when
take a walk outside of the city. The day was lovely; the soft, silvery sky and the verdant earth were adorned with the mellow sunlight. The birds sang sweetly in the air and on the trees; the winds, as they floated softly over the land, bore the perfume of countless flowers. It seemed a relief to emerge from the tumult of
the city, and breathe the invigorating air
of the rural districts.

As she was walking slowly along, a man
sprang over a fence at the side of the road, and came toward her. He was plainly dressed, yet with scrupulous neatness. He was one of those persons
to whom one is strangely attracted at first sight. There was an expression resting in his calm, blue eyes that was
the index to a kindly disposition; yet he lacked neither courage nor firmness.

The meeting between Will Clayton—for such was the new arrival's name—and Annie Burton was marked by deep feeling. It was plainly evident, judge from the demonstration of affection that was displayed in their greetings toward
each other, that their hearts were united
with bonds more stronger than those of
mere friendship.

Before Will had seen Annie that day,
he had been rambling in the woods and
meadows, and was now on his way
toward the city; but since he had met
her, all desire to return vanished, and
accordingly, he walked slowly along by her side. She did not regret his presence—in fact, she esteemed it to be a deep pleasure to be near him.

Like his fair companion, Will Clayton
possessed a taste for the beautiful in nature. His soul was full of the poetry of life. He delighted in the charming influence that emanates from mossy dells and refreshing groves.

Not far from the city of A— is situated a pretty lake. Towards this body of water our friends wended their way. In a little while they arrived near it, and
sat down on its grassy banks.

"Annie," said her lover, as he gazed on the silvery water before him, "what a beautiful world this is at some times!"
"Is it not always so?" she said, gazing at him. "It is something in ourselves that makes it seem gloomy. If we are unhappy, all around us will look dark;

"It is strange where that ring has gone," she said in a low tone; "I am
certain that I put it on the shelf last Saturday, and now it is missing." And she resumed her search with greater zeal,
but with the same unavailable result.

It was this loss that had caused the troubled expression that Mrs. Burton noticed resting on her daughter's face. It was not so much on account of the value
of the ring that she so deeply regretted
its loss; but she greatly prized it as a present from an aunt of hers who had been dead several years.

She resolved at present, however, to mention to no one anything in regard to
it, but to wait a while. In vain she strove to banish all thoughts relating to the ring from her mind; her appreciation of her aunt's kindness forbade her from so doing.

That evening, as Mr. Burton sat alone in his room, engaged in reading, he was aroused by the quick ringing of the bell
in the main hall. Laying his paper on a table at his side, he arose and went to answer the summons.

"Mr. Burton, I believe?" said a voice
at the door.

"That is my name," replied the banker.

"I should like to see you in private a few moments," said the man.

"Walk in." And, as he spoke, Mr. Burton led the way to the parlor, and offered
the stranger a rest.

"My name is Walton," said the new
arrival, sitting down; "I am from Cleveland. Perhaps you remember me."

Mr. Burton's face assumed an ashy
paleness as the man spoke.

"Well, sir, what do you want?" he
asked, endeavoring to assume a haughty appearance.

"What do I want?" replied the man,
in a sarcastic tone. "Well, there are many things that I would like to have.
I have come here this evening on business—not alone financially, but matrimonially. To come to the point—but are
we alone in the house?"

"Yes, there is no one here but ourselves," said Mr. Burton.

"Well," resumed Walton, "in the first place, I have taken a fancy to your
daughter, and I have come here to ask you if you'll use your influence in persuading her to become my wife."

"My daughter?" cried the banker.

"No, sir, never!"

"Are you aware," said Walton, in a calm voice, "that your fate lies in my power—that a few words on my part are sufficient to disclose secrets in your life, which you had rather remain unknown to the world? If you refuse, Albert Burton, to accede to my demands, then I shall expose you."

"But I cannot compel her to marry you," said the banker.

"I'll warrant that when she learns that her father is a—"

"Hush!" spoke Mr. Burton, in a warning voice.

"I understood you to say that we were alone," said Walton, suspiciously.

"I did, but I do not wish you to talk so loud."

"Ah! the subject then is rather disagreeable! Well, do you promise?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Burton; "I'll see her to-morrow."

Shortly afterward, Alf Walton arose and left the house.

Mr. Burton loved his daughter with a deed affection; but the fearful thought that either Annie Burton should marry Alf Walton, or he must suffer disgrace, decided him as to the course he must pursue. He taxed his brain, endeavoring to think of a way by which he might evade the fearful issue when it should occur; but, alas! the light of hope faded in the darkness of despair.

It was quite late when Mrs. Burton and Annie returned home.

"Why, father, what troubles you?" asked Annie, in a sympathetic voice, noticing the sorrowful expression on her father's face. "Are you ill?"

"Can I do anything for you, father?" she asked tenderly.

the voyage. She borrowed this sum
from her friend, giving her a 500 rouble
bond to cover this and other sums,
promising to redeem it in six months.
This period covered the annual drawing.
The time came, and the bond did not
draw a prize. The cashier then wrote for her money, and in reply received an authorization to sell this bond. On reflection, she concluded to keep it herself.
A year rolled by, and at the next drawing this identical bond drew the grand prize of 200,000 roubles. The dreams of the cashier were now more than realized,
so far as money went, for she had never
gone so far as to fancy herself the possessor of $75,000. She went to the proper place, showed the title, and received that sum in solid French money.
But she had scarcely deposited it in the Bank of France in her own name when
the Russian lady came on to claim her bond and the 200,000 roubles. She pretended that the bond had simply been left as security for a debt. The case came before the courts last week, and the Russian lady lost her case. Her authorization to sell the bonds was regarded as a sufficient title, and it made no difference whether the cashier sold it to herself or to a third party. The tribunal decided that the bond and prize it drew in the Russian lottery were the legitimate property of the cashier.—Paris Letter,

CLERICAL EMBARRASMENTS.

An Episcopal clergyman in Connecticut relates a couple of incidents aptly illustrating the embarrassments under which gentlemen of the cloth are often placed, provided they are gifted with a keen appreciation of the humorous. Every one has felt, a tendency on occasions of solemnity to laugh at the slightest incident calculated to provoke mirth, and the worthy rector of—parish shares this feeling in common with his lay brethren. From his elevated position of course every movement among his hearers is noticeable, and he confesses that it often requires an effort to preserve a sedate countenance when witnessing the tricks of restless urchins or the actions of eccentric individuals.

The instances to which he refers as particularly amusing were due to the presence of dogs, which appear to have an unaccountable liking for churches.
During the early part of the service on a Sunday in Lent, a saucy-looking, frisky little cur slipped up the main aisle, and encountered a hat just outside of one of the pew doors. He first smelled of it cautiously, then he set it around for a moment, and finally picking it up in his mouth shook it vigorously. By this time several persons had their eyes on the dog, and the sexton came tiptoeing up the aisle in pursuit, while the owner of the hat seized his cane and poked at the animal. Finding his situation uncomfortable, the cur trotted leisurely up the aisle to the platform, thence along to and down a side aisle, shaking the hat all the way with evident satisfaction.
The sexton summoned assistance, and an energetic but quiet chase was organized, so as not to disturb the services, to which however, few in the congregation were now giving attention. Nearly every face in the house was either lighted up by a smile or distorted by a grin, and the clergyman had a hard struggle to restrain his emotions as he witnessed the clever way in which the dog again dodged his pursuers, still clinging to the hat, which was by this time only a wreck of its former self.
Finally the cur made his escape through an open door, and order was restored.
But the climax, for the clergyman at least, came a moment later, when in continuing his reading, he encountered a warning reference to dogs—Matthew, xv.
26. In running his eyes down the page he fortunately detected it before the words came to his lips, and like a flash the thought occurred to him that to read this, after what had happened could not

A PROPHECY.

The following prophecy was current in the newspapers at the beginning of the Russian war, purporting to have been written at the time of the conquest of Constantinople by the Turks in the year 1453:

In twice two hundred years the Bear
The Crescent shall assail.
But if the Cock and Bull unite
The Bear shall not prevail.
But look, in twice ten years again,
Let Islam know and fear,
The Cross shall wax, the Crescent wane, Grow pale and disappear.

SOMETHING ABOUT FASHION.

BERTIE WINKLER, in Woman's Words.

What do you think of a girl who stands her ground for a full hour in defending our toilets from the tirades of an old hawk-eyed lawyer and a young bachelor?

You see, she being a plain matter-of-fact girl, rather inclined to be strong-minded, they thought that to enlist her sympathy on their side of the question and induce her to reveal some of the mysteries in a lady's boudoir, was an easy matter.

Not a bit of it, however, as you will perceive by the way in which she meets her bearded antagonists. Prudence will not permit me to give the exact words, in which those gentlemen denounced our way of dressing as ridiculous and extravagant. Suffice to say that she listened patiently to a half hour's harangue against "spit-curls," "bangs," and "frizzes," followed by merciless abuse and misconception as to the utility of corsets, bustles, &c., finally concluding with a most ludicrous description of our "powders," "jewelry," and "finish."

Then our friend took the platform with the question whether a waxed mustache and Piccadilly were ennobling to mankind, especially when both were so stiff, and projecting such an outrageous length as to lacerate any ladies' cheek, should she venture to approach nearer than arm's length? "Oh, that's to keep them at distance," triumphantly replied the bachelor. Nothing daunted, however, she continued to inquire why such small sized, empty heads were placed on such magnificent broad shoulders? If the tailors aid had not been called to remedy the defects of nature? No reply. As for any lady being more under the dictates of Fashion we need but look at the tight-fitting trousers she ordered for the stronger sex, sometime ago, who quietly submitted to her orders, even if it did inconvenience them more than they were willing to acknowledge, and place them at the mercy of some obliging friend to pull them down over his fashionable shoes every time he rose from his seat, to be convinced of the contrary. Extravagance we need not mention. A look at their heavy seal rings, diamond shirt-studs, and gold-headed canes, will prove that they out rival any lady in unnecessary expenditures.

At this assertion, both of her adversaries withdrew discomfited. Now, ladies, endorse the words of your victorious sister, with three hearty cheers, and then listen to me.

There are those of both sexes, who, for want of something else to occupy their minds are ever on the alert for something new, which, when it appears, is for the sake of style, so overdone as to become either common or ridiculous. The pull-backs lately in vogue, were never described in reliable fashion papers as tight and clinging as they were worn by some of our fashionable belles, who, to be sure that they are in the fashion, always carry everything to extremes, until they are the ridiculous habilliments so justly denounced by every sensible person.

As long as our young people notion of manhood and womanhood consist in a high hat and cane, and a long-train dress

HOW A LOTTERY PRIZE WAS WON.

When I wrote the other day about the modern passion for gambling I might have added something about the gambling that is constantly going on here outside of the clubs. There are no greater gamblers in the world than those who stake their money every day upon the Bourse, or upon the Petit Bourse during the evening. And the passion is not a whit less strong among the people who invest their small economies in stocks of various sorts. All try to get something to which a lottery is attached. There are semi-annual drawings to the Paris loans, and a number of prizes. In the first place, the lucky number gets 150,000 francs or about 200,000 francs according to the date of the loan: there is a smaller prize of 50,000 francs, several 1,000 francs, and a series of numbers are drawn to be paid off at their par value of the bonds. The Turkish loan has a drawing also, and a grand prize of 600,000 francs. Last year this was drawn by a man in Trieste, who came on here to negotiate it. As the Turks do not pay interest on their bonds, he had doubts about their paying the prizes drawn in their lottery, but he finally got some bankers to take it at 500,000 francs, giving $20,000 by way of discount. The Russian prize amounts to 200,000 roubles. All of these loans are popular, (save the Ottoman at this time,) for all who invest hope to draw a prize, and in addition to their interest they have the excitement attendant upon investment in a lottery. A curious case has just come before one of our tribunals, growing out of one of these drawings. Three years ago a Russian lady came to Paris and took rooms at the Byron Hotel, where she was very well received. She was a lady of a certain age, pretending to be a Countess and the wife of a General stationed in the Caucasus. She had money, and lived in style. In a very short time she took a fancy to the lady cashier of the hotel, and the two became exceedingly intimate. The cashier was an unmarried lady of thirty odd, who was dreaming of ultimate marriage, and was saving her money to buy her trousseau when the fortunate being who was to be her husband should chance along. She had waited years for him, but every year added something to her wealth, and made her more and more an object to be desired. She confined all this to the Russian lady, who gave her encouragement and hope, and the two spent many an hour together, talking over the matter. Naturally, the grande dame was informed of the econo-

his own part and that of his hearers. As the best course out of the dilemma, therefore he skipped the objectionable sentence, and none of his hearers suspected the true reason of his strange expression of countenance and faltering tone at the time. He had conquered, but not wishing to endure a second trial, gave the sexton rigid orders for the future concerning dogs.

Only a few weeks afterwards, however, and while the affair above related was still fresh in his memory, another adventure of the same nature occurred. A country couple came into the city to be married, and the service was performed in the church. Accompanying the couple was a brother of the bridegroom, who brought a dog with him, the groom having one also, and both having escaped the notice of the sexton. The brother seated himself in a front pew, and undertook the task of keeping both dogs quiet. At first they were in the aisle, but eventually the brother lured his own dog into the pew, and placing the animal's head between his knees, held him fast. Then he endeavored to entice the other into the pew by snapping his fingers softly and uttering a low whistle, all of which the clergyman could not avoid noticing. The stray animal would come as far as the pew door, but then, seeing the scrape in which his companion had become involved by over confidence, would turn tail and trot away. Then followed a renewal of the whistling and finger-snapping, until at last the clergyman could endure it no longer, and cutting the ceremony as short as possible, fled to a side room where he could give vent to his feelings. He says that since these two affairs he has never ventured to proceed with a service when a dog was any where in sight, for it would be impossible for him to keep his mind concentrated on his duties.—Harper's Magazine for June.

One time, when the army of Italy was crossing the Alps, threescore and more years ago, on that famous expedition with which all adventurous history rings, a nameless drummer boy was swept from the ranks, by the sudden dash of an avalanche, hurrying him down into a deep hollow, lined with never dissolving snow, such as frequently lies along among these desolate mountains. Singularly enough, he was not seriously injured by the plunge; he had slipped and slid over the crust of ice, and his light body had met with very few bruises and no blows that were fatal.

He clambered up to the top of the mass, and waved his hands aloft to show that he was alive. Along the giddy brink, two hundred feet above, the advancing train slowly and and wearily filed on. As the Turks do not pay interest on their bonds, he had doubts about their paying the prizes drawn in their lottery, but he finally got some bankers to take it at 500,000 francs, giving $20,000 by way of discount. The Russian prize amounts to 200,000 roubles. All of these loans are popular, (save the Ottoman at this time,) for all who invest hope to draw a prize, and in addition to their interest they have the excitement attendant upon investment in a lottery. A curious case has just come before one of our tribunals, growing out of one of these drawings. Three years ago a Russian lady came to Paris and took rooms at the Byron Hotel, where she was very well received. She was a lady of a certain age, pretending to be a Countess and the wife of a General stationed in the Caucasus. She had money, and lived in style. In a very short time she took a fancy to the lady cashier of the hotel, and the two became exceedingly intimate. The cashier was an unmarried lady of thirty odd, who was dreaming of ultimate marriage, and was saving her money to buy her trousseau when the fortunate being who was to be her husband should chance along. She had waited years for him, but every year added something to her wealth, and made her more and more an object to be desired. She confined all this to the Russian lady, who gave her encouragement and hope, and the two spent many an hour together, talking over the matter. Naturally, the grande dame was informed of the economic laid aside for the marriage settle-

As time wore on the cashier saw the lady's bills paid with less regularity, and dunning letters became frequent. Finally she began to borrow from her 'dear friend,' the cashier. One day she pre- tended to have received an order from her husband to return at once to Russia, but lacked the 500 francs necessary for the voyage. She borrowed this sum from her friend, giving her a 500 rouble bond to cover this and other sums, promising to redeem it in six months. This period covered the annual drawing. The time came, and the bond did not draw a prize. The cashier then wrote for her money, and in reply received an authorization to sell this bond. On re- flection, she concluded to keep it herself. A year rolled by, and at the next draw- ing this identical bond drew the grand prize of 200,000 roubles. The dreams of the cashier were now more than realized, so far as money went, for she had never gone so far as to fancy herself the pos- sessor of $75,000. She went to the proper place, showed it, and re- ceived that sum in solid French money. But she had scarcely deposited it in the Bank of France in her own name when the Russian lady came on to claim her bond and the 200,000 roubles. She pre- tended that the bond had simply been left as security for a debt. The case came before the courts last week, and the Russian lady lost her case. Her author- ization to sell the bonds was regarded as a sufficient title, and it made no difference whether the cashier sold it to herself or to a third party. The tribunal decided that the bond and prize it drew in the Russian lottery were the legitimate property of the cashier.—Paris Letter, N. Y. Times.

CLERICAL EMBARRASMENTS.

An Episcopal clergyman in Connecticut relates a couple of incidents aptly illus- trating the embarrassments under which gentlemen of the cloth are often placed, pro- vided they are gifted with a keen apprecia- tion of the humorous. One time, when the army of Italy was crossing the Alps, threescore and more years ago, on that famous expedition with which all adventurous history rings, a nameless drummer boy was swept from the ranks, by the sudden dash of an avalanche, hurrying him down into a deep hollow, lined with never dissolv- ing snow, such as frequently lies along among these desolate mountains. Singu- larly enough, he was not seriously in- jured by the plunge; he had slipped and slid over the crust of ice, and his light body had met with very few bruises and no blows that were fatal.

He clambered up to the top of the mass, and waved his hands aloft to show that he was alive. Along the giddy brink, two hundred feet above, the ad- vancing train slowly and and wearily filed on. His drum still hung suspended from his neck. It could not be said just what he intended—to keep his blood warm, or to attract the notice of the men—but he began to beat the military calls and changes to which he had been trained. In that clear, frosty air sound goes to an almost incredible distance. Every stroke of the tanno, the reveille, the advance, the charge, was heard by every soldier that marched on; they commented admiringly upon the pluck of this brave little musician, who patiently kept his sticks flying.

Of course the path up the mountain side zigzag, in order to rise over the im- mense acclivity. Thus it came to pass that for awhile the whole army would be out of sight, and then return again, near in line, but further up the steep. Clear and echoing floated up that rattling drum beat on their ears. Hardy veterans were there, who wept as the hours passed and they perceived they were leaving the poor boy behind. No command seemed likely to come now for any effort to save his life. Word had already been sent to the Emperor, but he decided to leave the lad where he was. What was a single drum- mer boy to the army of Napoleon Bonaparte! And before long it became evident that so the lad understood it likewise.

He redoubled his activity. Natural fear of freezing stimulated him for a short time to renewed exertion, and he vigorously plied his arms to keep his life pulse warm. Far along the thin bright ridge above him, he saw the vanishing columns growing fainter. At last he knew that they did not intend to give him rescue. Then brave in the midst of ab- solute despair, he suddenly changed the brisk relief call he had been beating, to a sadder strain, and a deeper meaning. He pause a few moments, then began a funeral march. They all heard those sober strokes of death in the cold air, but could give no heed.

It can be well understood that every father of a son at home, among that vast host, yearned over the lad with suf- fering of agony that was almost stifling. For as he saw the courageous endurance and, finally, the heroic surrender, when the tired boy at last decently composed his limbs on the snowy banks to die, with the frost for his shroud, and the falling night for his pall, he shuddered to think this lost lad might have been his own.

Since that, for many a year—so the romances of those days tell us—the veter- ans of the Italian campaign have hushed their voices at the camp-fires as they told the tale of the drummer boy of the Alps, and thought of the silent solitudes where now his slender body lay frozen beside his drum.

Only a child! Yet children have souls. Souls are more than bodies. Immortal life is more than temporal. Yet the calu- world march on as if empires hung on the balance of the moment, and even the drum-beat of a soul calling for help need not be heeded or heard.

THE PILGRIMS IN ROME.

lady being more under the dictates of Fashion we need but look at the tight- fitting trousers she ordered for the strong- er sex, sometime ago, who quietly sub- mitted to her orders, even if it did incon- venience them more than they were wil- ling to acknowledge, and place them at the mercy of some obliging friend to pull them down over his fashionable shoes every time he rose from his seat, to be convinced of the contrary. Extrava- gance we need not mention. A look at their heavy seal rings, diamond shirt- studs, and gold-headed canes, will prove that they out rival any lady in unneces- sary expenditures.

At this assertion, both of her adver- saries withdrew discomfited. Now, ladies, endorse the words of your victorious sister, with three hearty cheers, and then listen to me.

There are those of both sexes, who, for, want of something else to occupy their minds are ever on the alert for something new, which, when it appears, is for the sake of style, so overdone as to become either common or ridiculous. The pull-backs lately in vogue, were never described in reliable fashion papers as tight and cling- ing as they were worn by some of our fashionable belles, who, to be sure that they are in the fashion, always carry everything to extremes, until they are the ridiculous habilitments so justly de- nounced by every sensible person.

As long as our young people notion of manhood and womanhood consist in a high hat and cane, and a long-train dress with plenty of finery, I fear any preach- ing to the contrary will effect but little.

I am no advocate of impossible dress reform by any means. I simply wish to see a woman appear attractive, with as little show and extravagance as possible. A woman's future depends largely upon her style of dressing, and since sensible men are rarely attracted by a person dressed in and above the height of fash- ion, it is essential to her happiness as well as to the honor of her sex, that she should let good common sense govern the desire to appear gay and conspicuous in fashionable circles. It is by no means an honor to be called the bell of the evening party, when that title has been conferred by expensive dress, in which case she will, even if courted for a while, be avoid- ed by the well-meaning portion, who dreaded the expense of supporting such a bundle of satin and lace.

Economy is the rule of the day, and that should in all cases decide a lady's choice in what she wears. Beauty un- adorned is a rare sight. But, oh, ladies beauty adorned in that rare, simple elegance which characterizes every true woman, and which has been admired through all ages—let that be your study and your idea of perfect womanhood.

Turkish Atrocities.

Gladstone in his recent speech on the Eastern Question spoke as follows:— "What I want to know is whether we are to continue making ourselves ridiculous, and at the same time utterly deluding the world by what the Government is pleased to call remonstrance upon these subjects. (Cheers.) This matter grows worse and worse! We have a new crop of horrors reported from Erzeroum as having occurred no longer ago than the 14th of March. A body of troops went into a village and demanded food and money. Their demands were complied with, and they then proceeded to mal- treat the men and to violate the women and girls, several of whom died in conse- quence of the treatment to which they were subjected. On this occasion again an en- ergetic telegram was despatched in the first instance, but afterwards Lord Derby spoke with bated breath, and, as on the previous occasion, nothing came of the matter. My contention is that this con- duct is not compatible with the honour of England, and that if no result is to follow upon communications of the kind to which I allude they ought never to be made. It is bad enough to say that you will take no notice of crimes such as those, but it is worse to notice them in a way which you know full well can pro-apartment. "It is strange where that ring has come," she said in a low tone; "I am certain that I put it on the shelf last Thursday, and now it is missing." And he resumed her search with greater zeal, it with the same unavailable result.

It was this loss that had caused the doubled expression that Mrs. Burton noticed resting on her daughter's face. It was not so much on account of the value of the ring that she so deeply regretted the loss; but she greatly prized it as a present from an aunt of hers who had been dead several years.

She resolved at present, however, to content to not care anything in regard to it, but to wait a while. In vain she strove to banish all thoughts relating to the ring from her mind; her appreciation of her aunt's kindness forbade her from so doing.

That evening, as Mr. Burton sat alone in his room, engaged in reading, he was aroused by the quick ringing of the bell of the main hall. Lying his paper on a table at his side, he arose and went to answer the summons.

"Mr. Burton, I believe?" said a voice from the door.

"That is my name," replied the banker.

"I should like to see you in private a few moments," said the man.

"Walk in." And, as he spoke, Mr. Burton led the way to the parlor, and offered the stranger a rest.

"My name is Walton," said the new rival, sitting down; "I am from Cleveland. Perhaps you remember me?"

Mr. Burton's face assumed an ashy paleness as the man spoke.

"Well, sir, what do you want?" he asked, endeavoring to assume a haughty appearance.

"What do I want?" replied the man, a sarcastic tone. "Well, there are many things that I would like to have. I have come here this evening on business—not alone financially, but matrimonially. To come to the point—but are you alone in the house?"

"Yes, there is no one here but ourselves," said Mr. Burton.

"Well," resumed Walton, "in the first place, I have taken a fancy to your daughter, and I have come here to ask you if you'll use your influence in persuading her to become my wife."

"My daughter!" cried the banker. "No, sir, never!"

"Are you aware," said Walton, in a low voice, "that your fate lies in my power—that a few words on my part are sufficient to disclose secrets in your life, which you had rather remain unknown to the world? If you refuse, Albert Burton, to accede to my demands, then I will expose you."

"But I cannot compel her to marry you," said the banker.

"I'll warrant that when she learns that her father is a—"

"Hush!" spoke Mr. Burton, in a warning voice.

"I understood you to say that we were alone," said Walton, suspiciously.

"I did, but I do not wish you to talk aloud."

"Ah! the subject then is rather disagreeable! Well, do you promise?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Burton; "I'll see to it to-morrow."

Shortly afterward, Alf Walton arose and left the house.

Mr. Burton loved his daughter with a fond affection; but the fearful thought that either Annie Burton should marry Alf Walton, or he must suffer disgrace, decided him as to the course he must pursue. He taxed his brain, endeavoring to think of a way by which he might evade the fearful issue when it should occur; but, alas! the light of hope faded in the darkness of despair.

It was quite late when Mrs. Burton and Annie returned home.

"Why, father, what troubles you?" asked Annie, in a sympathetic voice, noticing the sorrowful expression on her father's face.

"Are you ill?"

"Can I do anything for you, father?" he asked tenderly.

The instances to which he refers as particularly amusing were due to the presence of dogs, which appear to have an unaccountable liking for churches. During the early part of the service on a Sunday in Lent, a saucy-looking, frisky little cur slipped up the main aisle, and encountered a hat just outside of one of the pew doors. He first smelled of it cautiously, then he led it around for a moment, and finally picking it up in his mouth shook it vigorously. By this time several persons had their eyes on the dog, and the sexton came tiptoeing up the aisle in pursuit, while the owner of the hat seized his cane and poked at the animal. Finding his situation uncomfortable, the cur trotted leisurely up the aisle to the platform, thence along to and down a side aisle, shaking the hat all the way with evident satisfaction. The sexton summoned assistance, and an energetic but quiet chase was organized, so as not to disturb the services, to which however, few in the congregation were now giving attention. Nearly every face in the house was either lighted up by a smile or distorted by a grin and the clergyman had a hard struggle to restrain his emotions as he witnessed the clever way in which the dog again dodged his pursuers, still clinging to the hat, which was by this time only a wreck of its former self. Finally the cur made his escape through an open door, and order was restored. But the climax, for the clergyman at least, came a moment later, when in continuing his reading, he encountered a warning reference to dogs—Matthew, xv. 26. In running his eyes down the page he fortunately detected it before the words came to his lips, and like a flash the thought occurred to him that to read this, after what had happened could not fail to provoke merriment both on

AN AUDIENCE WITH THE POPE.

LONDON, May 25.—A Rome despatch says the American pilgrims numbered fifty ecclesiastics and one hundred and fifty lay members, and were led by the Archbishop of Philadelphia and the Bishop of Allegheny, Nachitoches, Albany, Louisville, Galveston, Detroit, Green Bay, Hartford, and others. About one hundred and fifty American Catholic residents and visitors were also present, with students of American colleges and the American students of the propaganda. After the addresses they were presented to the Pope, who was seated on his throne. His Holiness replied that he remembered how an eminent Cardinal had told him at the commencement of his pontificate that from America would come the great comfort of the Church. He now saw the fulfilment of that prediction. He spoke in great praise of the American nation, the great things it had accomplished, and how in the flower of its youth it had acquired strength sufficient to arouse the jealousy of European nations, but there were errors of youth in nations, as in men, and he would remind them of two he had noticed in them, viz., too great precipitancy in the pursuit of material things, and too proud a feeling of independence. They prided themselves on being Republicans—(here there was a laugh, in which the Cardinals joined)—but they must remember that all must bow the head to enter Paradise. They must be humble, and not let material things interfere with prayer. He blessed all the American people, the Catholics that they might continue firm in the faith, the Protestants that they might be illuminated, and prayed that good might descend in abundance upon them all.

Safety Railway Signals.

A flashing light that indicates the speed and distance of a train, and shows whether it is at rest or in motion, has been introduced as a rear light on freight trains. It is formed of two lights—one red and one white—and designed to be placed one on each side of the (caboose) car, so that they may be seen in both directions on the line. A simple device for hiding the lights at intervals is affixed to each lamp so that it may be made to "flash" or alternately appear and disappear, and by suitable gearing this is connected with one of the axles of the car. While the car is at rest the lights are steadily visible; when the train moves the lights flash once for each revolution of the wheels, and thus its movements and actual speed can be easily estimated as far as the light can be seen. Another advantage results from the fact that the white light is visible at a greater distance than the red. The engineer of a following train may from this keep within the limits of safe distance by keeping the flashing red light dim or quite obscure and by coming to a stop the moment the flashing runs slow or stops and the lights become fixed and steadily visible.

A pattern helmet has been approved by the Queen, and will shortly be definitely adopted as the head-dress for the army. The material is cork; the colour dark blue for home service, and white in India and on foreign stations; with a handsome gilt plate and gilt spike. The effect is soldierlike; while it is lighter, more durable, and a far greater protection to the head than the shako in present use.

OTTAWA, Dec. 8, 1873.

DEAR SIR,—In accordance with your request I now state in writing the substance of the conversation I had the pleasure of having with you on Friday morning in reference to the deposits of the Dominion Government.

I complain that not now, nor perhaps at any other time, have these deposits been fairly divided between the respective Provinces, taking as a basis of such division either population, wealth, the volume of commercial transactions, or the banking capital in them, and that in the different Provinces great injustice has been shown in the distribution of these deposits; that while it contributes largely to the revenue of the country—many think to the extent of one-half of the gross amount—it has not now, nor has it had for years, one-tenth of the Government deposits or Government surpluses placed with its moneyed institutions. I hold it has a right to expect and demand from your Government fair play and equal justice in the disposal of your (for the time being) surplus funds.

To prove that our province is not, and has not been, fairly dealt by, permit me to quote a few figures from an official statement now before me, showing the balances held by the Government on the morning of the 3rd inst.:

Total amount at credit of Government in all banks of the Dominion, $8,237,000.

In all Ontario banks, $837,000.

In Lower Canada and eastern Province banks, $7,400,000.

Or about 10 per cent. of the gross amount in Ontario banks at the credit of the Government on the same day.

With the same banks on open accounts, or without interest, $3,753,000. Of this sum Ontario banks only held $154,000, or less than four per cent.

Do you think that we in Ontario should be satisfied with the state of things indicated by the above figures?

Two of our largest Ontario banks with a united paid up capital of over $8,500,000 (eight and a half millions) had between them on one account $20,000, and the major part of this sum was held for only a few days, while several Lower Canada banks with not a tithe of this capital, had from five to twenty times the amount named. One institution, and that not a commercial one, had for strictly jobbing or speculation purposes, over one million of the people's money, and a large portion of it without interest. The two banks referred to had only $20,000 on the same day, and all our banks held only $154,000 on open account.

I complain that while our banks in Ontario had in all forms only $837,000, that the banks or branches of banks, doing business in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick held $1,750,000 of the people's money, while the population of these two provinces united is not one-half of that of Ontario; nor can I believe that their united wealth bears a larger proportion to ours. I contend the great injustice done to our moneyed institutions has cramped them in their dealings with their customers, and has injuriously affected every branch of trade in Ontario.

I think I have said enough to prove that Ontario has not been fairly dealt by, and now I ask you and your Government, in the name of the people of Ontario, to right the wrong. Let me in conclusion suggest a few ideas that I beg to commend to your consideration in bringing about this end:

1. I think the Government should still employ the Bank of Montreal as its chief fiscal agent.

2. I think you should arrange as soon as convenient that the revenue arising

SEDUCTION AND MURDER.

THE CASTLETON HORROR.

Abortionists at Work.

ARREST OF THE MURDERERS.

COLBORNE, Ont., June 1.—A fearful crime was committed in the little country village of Castleton a few days since. The victim, Miss Alberta Wade, was a daughter of John Wade, of Brighton Township, and was engaged as school teacher in the neighborhood of Castleton. The last seen of her alive was on Friday evening of last week, when she was noticed driving with a young man named Mallory, the son of a farmer in the neighborhood. About one o'clock that night young Mallory returned home alone, and informed his father that he wanted money, as he had got into a scrape which would oblige him to leave the country; that he had seduced a young lady; and on his father advising him to marry her he stated that he could not, as she had gone. After securing what money he could he drove to Colborne, where he bought a second-class ticket for Detroit. By some means the news that Miss Wade was missing did not reach his father's house until last Sunday. A search was instituted, but not until Thursday morning last was her body discovered. It was found in a lonely dell, in a low swampy place in the woods about a quarter of a mile from Mallory's farm, and about three miles north of Castleton. She had been thrown into a hole apparently scraped out with a hoe, and when found had all her clothes on except her drawers which were tightly drawn around her head and neck. A covering of loose earth, leaves, brush, &c., was thrown over the body to the depth of a few inches, the top being carefully smoothed over with moss and leaves to make the grave look as natural as possible. The body had been taken to the woods in a buggy or wagon, the ground where the horse had stood near by having been pawed. The presence of a freshly broken bough was the means of indicating the whereabouts of the body.

An inquest and a post mortem examination have been held—the former by Messrs Gould and Fyfe, acting as coroners, and the latter by Dr. Willoughby, assisted by Drs. Thorburn, Deans, Douglas, and Richardson. From the evidence it would appear that the girl was about four months advanced in pregnancy, and it is generally supposed that young Mallory was her seducer. When it was found that she was enccinte she was induced to visit an old man named Smith, who bears the reputation of being one of the detestable medical specialists who are resorted to in such cases. He had apparently tried mechanical appliances several times, but had failed. One of his attempts appears to have been made a week ago last Tuesday, as a Mrs. Miller stated in evidence that Smith had told her that he had then made the attempt and had failed, but was bound to accomplish it yet. She stated also that an appointment for another attempt had been made for the following Friday evening,—that on which Miss Wade was noticed driving with Mallory. It further appears from the evidence that on Friday evening after driving in the direction of Grafton with a young lady. Though the latter has not been positively identified as Miss Wade, the evidence of several witnesses as to her dress, &c., goes to show almost conclusively that it was she. The pair were traced to a hotel in Grafton. Here there is a break in the chain of evidence, but there are good hopes that on the resumption of the inquest on to-day—the missing links will be supplied. The two were noticed at a hotel in Grafton at eight o'clock on Friday evening. The same evening about nine Mallory was give two or three gasps, and then, imagined, she fainted away. They both became alarmed, Weldon according to Smith's story being so terrified that he seemed incapable of word. On Smith asking him, after a few minutes had elapsed, what he proposed, Weldon said he would go and do Cope Mallory. He went out for purpose, and returned in ten or fifteen minutes bringing Mallory with him, according to this statement it would appear either that Mallory was within short distance off (probably in the road on the other side of the road, as Weldon had left the buggy), or that he had been behind hand in his appointment at the hut, and was on the way when Weldon met him. The two men carried the body across the fields that lie between Smith's shanty and the road running north from Castleton. Smith gathered from the conversation between the parties that the horse buggy was standing in the grove on the other side of the road. Smith's occasion, so far as it affects the case at sent, ends here, but he hinted vaguely that there was "another party" mixed in the affair, though he refused to reveal the name.

Miss Wade's parents live at a considerable distance from where she was found, and did not hear of her absence several days, and when they did the news it was in the shape of a rumour that she and Cope Mallory had run a suspicion that this was not the true of affairs first arose from finding that girl had left in her room all her clothes except those she had on, and her jewelry.

Castleton is a straggling little village some six or seven miles north of Colborne station, on the Grand Trunk railway, and lying on the main road runs north from that station through the county of Northumberland. The country in the neighborhood appears to have been settled for a good many years, the inhabitants—including the Waddells, Mallorys, and Weldon families—mostly well-to-do farmers. In a wet little log hut, situated on the top of a hill about half a mile from the village, it has lived for many years back a person generally known in the neighborhood as "Old Dave," or who is now pretty clearly proven to have been one of the principal characters in the tragedy. "Old Dave" is about 56 years of age, and has lived in or near Castleton for the last thirty years. Ostensibly subsisted on the wages of the odd work which he was accustomed to perform for the farmers around the village. He wears about as villainous a look countenance as Providence ever hung the front of a human being to warn the world against a scoundrel. When speaking his face is distorted into a hideous grim, and his small, twinkling eyes set out in a cowardly, uncertain kind of way from beneath a pair of bushy brows. In fact a combination of features so indicative of low brutality is seldom met with in real life, and the "make-up" which could successfully counterfeit the stage would be a fortune to its wearer. Strange and startling as it may appear this creature has borne in the neighborhood the reputation of a "professional abortionist for years back; and that has had a good many patients in apparent, not merely from the common opinion of the country, but from his own confession and the testimony taken at inquest, to say nothing of the still more conclusive evidence in the shape of instruments found in his den. Unhappily his brethren who operate in the cities, he does not pretend to have an elementary knowledge of medicine in truth he is scarcely able to sign

 NAPANEE, JUNE, 8th 1877.

The Halifax organ of the Tory Party, wailing over the lack of spirit displayed by the faithful in their shabby treatment of the Ontario organ The Mail, which is just now in the deep waters of financial tribulation, says reprovingly, to this effect, "In times past under the election laws, the Conservative Party spent fifty times the amount that would be required to put The Mail in a sound financial condition. Let us make a little calculation; the amount required to put The Mail in a sound financial condition," is estimated by good authority to be about one hundred thousand dollars. Therefore, as $100,000 is to fifty, so is the amount spent in times past under the election laws, by the Conservative party to five million, a rather modest sum for the party that is particularly industrious at the present time in throwing stones at the political sins of the Reform party. If the financial management of The Mail, held up as the means of the salvation of the country, but in reality the doer of the dirty work of the party, is a sample of the manner in which its disciples would manage the finances of the Dominion, we hope the day will be long postponed that will place the Finance Department of the Government at the mercy of the Reactionists and depose the present minister who has safely guided the ship of state through the stormiest waters, financially speaking, that have ever broken upon the shores of the Dominion.

CATECHISM FOR TORIES.

The St. Thomas Journal has arranged the following Catechism, to be answered by the present opposition. Any reader not acquainted with the political history of the country cannot fail to plainly see the intended real parallel in circumstances, actually brought about by members of the Tory party and the hypothetical questions propounded:

Suppose it was announced to the public to-morrow, and unquestionable evidence of the fact submitted, that Mr. MacKenzie had given the contract for the Welland canal improvements—the same for which he is now inviting tenders—to a company of American and Canadian capitalists on the condition that they contributed $300,000 to the Reform election fund,—how many Reformers or "Clear Grits" among all his followers in Parliament and in the country would stand by him one day?

Or suppose it was shown that his Minister of Justice, Mr. Blake, had consented to accept from the Grand Trunk Railway—now indebted to the Government in the sum of $15,142,633.33—a sum of $15,000, by way of contributing to a Blake testimonial, while the railway paid not one farthing of principal or interest on its debt, what would the people say of Mr. Blake?

Or suppose it was shown that Mr. MacKenzie had, just previous to the recent elections in Ottawa and Lincoln, drawn on the Grand Trunk Railway treasury for $25,000, and absconded with the same, what would the people say of Mr. MacKenzie?

The two were noticed at a hotel in Grafton at eight o'clock on Friday evening. The same evening about nine Mallory was seen in Castleton, and it was about one o'clock the next morning when he awoke his father and told him that he had got into a scrape.

Smith, Weldon, and his brother, the last named being, it is supposed, an accessory have been arrested, and are now in custody, and news was received to-day that young Mallory was also apprehended while stopping with some relative in Smith's Creek Michigan. He is in the hands of the United States authorities, and as soon as the usual official steps have been taken he will be brought over.

THE VICTIM,

or rather the latest victim, of "Old Dave's" art, Miss Alberta Wade, was the daughter of Mr. John Wade, who lives in Brighton township, a few miles from Castleton. She was educated for a school teacher in Colborne, where she was, in consequence, well known. Her parents and other relations bear the reputation in the neighborhood of intelligent and respectable people, while she herself is invariably spoken of as a charming, handsome, and modest girl against whose character nothing was ever heard previously to the late unhappy affair. Last New Year's she began her experience as a teacher in a country school a short distance from Castleton, and boarded at the house of Mr. Ery E. Mallory, the father of the young man who figures as the seducer in the case. Mr. Mallory, Sr., has the reputation of being a well-living man, and acts as a local preacher in the neighborhood. His son, John Cope Mallory, or, as he is generally called by his acquaintances,

COPE MALLORY,

was a young man of 20 years of age. So far as can be learned he was a rather common place individual, who would not be considered likely to prove attractive to a girl of Miss Wade's attainments. Before he became involved in the present case he was looked upon as a person of tolerably good habits. Though he and Miss Wade were in the habit of attending parties together and going for frequent drives, no suspicion appears to have been entertained by the members of his way, and lying on the main road which runs north from that station through the county of Northumberland. The country in the neighborhood appears to have been settled for a good many years, and the inhabitants—including the Wad Mallory, and Weldon families—are mostly well-to-do farmers. In a wretched little log hut, situated on the top of a hill about half a mile from the village, there has lived for many years back a person generally known in the neighborhood as "Old Dave," or who is now pretty clearly proven to have been one of the principal characters in the tragedy. "Old Dave" is about 56 years of age, and has lived in or near Castleton for the last thirty years. Ostensibly he subsisted on the wages of the odd day work which he was accustomed to perform for the farmers around the village. In fact a combination of features so indicative of low brutality is seldom met with in real life, and the "make-up" which could successfully counterfeit it on the stage would be a fortune to its wearer. Strange and startling as it may appear this creature has borne in the neighborhood the reputation of a "professional abortionist for years back; and that he has had a good many patients is apparent, not merely from the common talk of the country, but from his own confession and the testimony taken at the inquest, to say nothing of the still more conclusive evidence in the shape of the instruments found in his den. Unlike his brethren who operate in the large cities, he does not pretend to have even an elementary knowledge of medicine in truth he is scarcely able to sign his own name. If the horrible and sickening details of this old villain's modus operandi in his devilish art, as they were obtained from trustworthy sources, and as they are expected to appear in the medical evidence on the resumption of the inquest, were known, they would one would imagine, have the effect of stamping out this evil in Canada, if it did anything under the sun could do to the victims of shame from such desperate resorts. Smith's hut consists of two rooms about eight feet square; his furniture of one rickety chair and a table, a bed made on boards and a few of the simplest kitchen utensils. His shanty does not even boast a stove—a fire-place of the most primitive description doing duty for the purposes of warmth and cookery. He is reported to be a widower, and to have six grown up sons and daughters somewhere in the States. A giving some insight into his character, may be mentioned that the "Mrs. Phynetta Miller," whose evidence is given below, lived with him for years, though for some time back she has been living in a similar relation with another man. Some years ago his den was noted as the resort of abandoned creatures of both sexes.

Sworn, said—I was not acquainted with Alberta Wade; never saw her to my knowledge; heard of her disappearance last Tuesday afternoon (29th May). David Smith told me he had been with Alberta Wade and had a trial upon the lady, but without effect; I cannot remember exactly when this conversation took place; it was within the last two weeks he told me he had used an instrument but without effect; he told me that Mallory's son had brought her to see him; he did not tell me what day it was; he told me it was done in the night in McHugh's woods, back of Castleton opposite Smith's house; I asked who was with the lady, and he said Cope Mallory; he said he expected them back the following Friday night about midnight; he spoke of it as a business transaction, and as if he was accustomed to

Sir JOHN McDONALD is not the little god to all the world that he is to his worshippers in Ontario. His admirers in Ontario are never tired of singing psalms of praise to his oratory talents, ability, etc. No matter what nonsense he utters, on a platform, subservient claqueurs give the signal, and the multitude respond in frantic yells of simulated delight. Blasphemy from his mouth becomes to them "a very good joke indeed." His late speech in Toronto at his grand reception, with torch-bearers in the procession, hired to express the burning and spontaneous zeal felt for the great chieftain's glory, at one dollar a head, was a most lamentable failure as a political oration, as buncombe it was an eminent success. But let us get an unbiased opinion from an outsider, a Prince Edward Island paper, for instance, the Patriot, which says—

"Sir John A. Macdonald's speech in Toronto the other day was a rhapsody of brag, bluster and abuse. The report of it that we have seen—the Leader—does not contain a sentence of common sense. That the man who could, on any occasion, utter such wretched stuff should claim to take rank among British statesmen is in the last degree presumptuous. No respectable English politician, with any regard for his reputation, would dream of making such a violent and, in every respect, such an undignified speech as Sir John A. Macdonald, twenty years Premier of Canada, delivered from the balcony of the United Empire Club on the evening of his return to Toronto."

CATECHISM FOR TORIES.

The St. Thomas Journal has arranged the following Catechism, to be answered by the present opposition. Any reader at all acquainted with the political history of the country cannot fail to plainly see the intended real parallel in circumstances, actually brought about by members of the Tory party and the hypothetical questions propounded—

Suppose it was announced to the public to-morrow, and unquestionable evidence of the fact submitted, that Mr. Mackenzie had given the contract for the Welland canal improvements—the same for which he is now inviting tenders—to a company of American and Canadian capitalists on the condition that they contributed $300,000 to the Reform election fund,—how many Reformers or "Clear Grits" among all his followers in Parliament and in the country would stand by him one day?

Or suppose it was shown that his Minister of Justice, Mr. Blake, had consented to accept from the Grand Trunk Railway—now indebted to the Government in the sum of $15,142,633.33—a sum of $15,000 by way of contributing to a Blake testimonial, while the railway paid not one farthing of principal or interest on its debt, what would the people say of Mr. Blake?

Or suppose it was shown that Mr. Mackenzie had, just previous to the recent elections in Ottawa and Lincoln, drawn on the Grand Trunk Railway treasury for $25,000, and checked out the full amount for the benefit of Messrs. Norris and Featherstone, what would the Reformers and Tories of Canada say?

Or suppose it was shown that Mr. Blake as Minister of Justice had employed the law firm of Blake, Kerr and Boyd in a number of very important suits before the Supreme and Exchequer Courts, paying for their services out of the public treasury at the rate of $5,000 a year, what would a discerning public think of the transaction?

Or suppose it was shown that the Grand Trunk Railway, after contributing $15,000 to a Blake testimonial, $25,000 to the election expenses of Messrs. Norris and Featherstone, and $200,000 more for the Beverly Robinsons and Col. Cumberland's of the Reform party—suppose it was shown that after making these contributions, without paying a farthing of principal or interest on its large indebtedness to the Dominion, the Government introduced a bill in Parliament authorizing the acceptance of twenty-five cents on the dollar in full and final liquidation of $15,142,633.33, what would the people say about it?

Or suppose it was shown that Mr. Blake had in his capacity of Minister of Justice addressed a circular to the poor occupants on Ordnance Lands, calling upon them forthwith to pay up all sums in arrears and remit to him a fee of $2.50 for expenses, contrary to all law,—and suppose Mr. Blake pocketed from this source $545 while in receipt of his stated salary as Minister of Justice, what would honorable men without distinction of party think of his conduct?

Or suppose it was shown that upon Mr. Mackenzie's resignation of the office of Treasurer of Ontario he withdrew from the public treasury the sum of $32,000 and placed it to the credit of his private account in the bank; and suppose that two years afterwards, without the consent or knowledge of Mr. Crooks, he paid out $6,000 of this sum to a personal and political friend, secretly restoring the balance to the treasury but refusing to account for the $6,000,—what would the people say, and how much confidence could they place in Mr. Mackenzie as an honest man?

may have been arrested, and are now in custody, and news was received to-day that young Mallory was also apprehended while stopping with some relative in Smith's Creek Michigan. He is in the hands of the United States authorities, and as soon as the usual official steps have been taken he will be brought over.

THE VICTIM,

or rather the latest victim, of "Old Dave's" art, Miss Alberta Wade, who lives in Brighton township, a few miles from Castleton. She was educated for a school teacher in Colborne, where she was, in consequence, well known. Her parents and other relations bear the reputation in the neighborhood of intelligent and respectable people, while she herself is invariably spoken of as a charming, handsome, and modest girl against whose character nothing was ever heard previously to the late unhappy affair. Last New Year's she began her experience as a teacher in a country school a short distance from Castleton, and boarded at the house of Mr. Ery E. Mallory, the father of the young man who figures as the seducer in the case. Mr. Mallory, Sr., has the reputation of being a well-living man, and acts as a local preacher in the neighborhood. His son, John Cope Mallory, or, as he is generally called by his acquaintances, was a young man of 20 years of age. So far as can be learned he was a rather common place individual, who would not be considered likely to prove attractive to a girl of Miss Wade's attainments. Before he became involved in the present case he was looked upon as a person of tolerably good habits. Though he and Miss Wade were in the habit of attending parties together and going for frequent drives, no suspicion appears to have been entertained by the members of his family that there was an improper intimacy between them until a short time before the young lady's disappearance. The general opinion was that they were "keeping company"—as the phrase goes—and that they were likely soon to be married. Another prominent party in the case is

Smith, has all along taken his position very coolly, or rather with the greatest indifference, either because he is too ignorant to comprehend it, or, more likely, is so hardened as to have survived even the sensation of fear. His confession is substantially that Weldon and Mallory arranged with him that on Tuesday night the 22nd of May they should bring Miss Wade with them for the purpose of having an operation performed on her; that on the appointed night the three parties came, but that his attempts to procure an abortion on that occasion failed. For some reason or other—perhaps because they were apprehensive of discovery if they went to his hut—the grove which lies east of and at some distance from his den was made the rendezvous of the party. That night an appointment was made for the following Friday night—the evening it should be borne in mind, on which Miss Wade was last seen alive. Smith states that on the Friday night shortly before midnight, Weldon and the young lady came to his hut. All the sickening details, which the old villain related with the utmost coolness and particularity, need not be repeated here; suffice it to say that while he was performing the operation Weldon noticed the poor girl

ARREST OF THE MURDERERS.

COLBORNE, Ont., June 1.—A fearful crime was committed in the little country village of Castleton a few days since. The victim, Miss Alberta Wade, was a daughter of John Wade, of Brighton township, and was engaged as school teacher in the neighborhood of Castleton. She had been seen of her alive was on Friday evening of last week, when she was noticed driving with a young man named Mallory, the son of a farmer in the neighborhood. About one o'clock that night young Mallory returned home alone, and informed his father that he had lost money, as he had got into a rape which would oblige him to leave the country; that he had seduced a young girl; and on his father advising him to marry her he stated that he could not, as she had gone. After securing what money he could he drove to Colborne, where he bought a second-class ticket for Detroit. By some means the father was that Miss Wade was missing, and did not reach his father's house until last Sunday. A search was instituted, but not until Thursday morning last was her body discovered. It was found in a lonely dell, in a low swampy place in the woods about a quarter of a mile from Mallory's farm, and about three miles north of Castleton. It had been thrown into a hole apparently scraped out with a hoe, and when it was found all her clothes, except her drawers which were tightly drawn around her head and neck. A covering of loose earth, leaves, brush, &c., was thrown over the body to the depth of a few inches, the top being carefully smoothed over with moss and leaves to make the grave look as natural as possible. The body had been taken to the woods in a buggy or wagon, the ground where the horse had stood near by having been pawed. The presence of a freshly broken bough was a means of indicating the whereabouts of the body.

An inquest and a post mortem examination have been held—the former by Messrs Gould and Effe, acting as coroners, and the latter by Dr. Willoughby, assisted by Drs. Thorburn, Deans, Douglas, and Richardson. From the evidence would appear that the girl was about four months advanced in pregnancy, and is generally supposed that young Mallory was her seducer. When it was found that she was enroute she was induced to visit an old man named Smith, who bears the reputation of being one of the detestable medical specialists who resorted to in such cases. He had apparently tried mechanical appliances several times, but had failed. One of his attempts appears to have been made a week ago last Tuesday, as a Mrs. Miller stated in evidence that Smith had told her that he had then made the attempt and had failed, but was bound to accomplish it yet. She stated also that an appointment for another attempt had been made for the following Friday evening—that on which Miss Wade was noticed driving with Mallory. It further appears from the evidence that on Friday evening after driving in the direction of Grafton with a young lady. Though the latter is not been positively identified as Miss Wade, the evidence of several witnesses as to her dress, &c., goes to show almost conclusively that it was she. The pair were traced to a hotel in Grafton. Here there is a break in the chain of evidence, as there are good hopes that on the resumption of the inquest on to day—the missing links will be supplied. The two were noticed at a hotel in Grafton at give two or three gasps, and then, as he imagined, she fainted away. The two attempted to restore her to consciousness, but soon the horrible truth dawned upon their minds that she was dead. They both became alarmed, Weldon, according to Smith's story being so terrified that he seemed incapable of word or act. On Smith asking him, after a few minutes had elapsed, what he proposed to do, Weldon said he would go and bring Cope Mallory. He went out for that purpose, and returned in ten or fifteen minutes bringing Mallory with him. According to this statement it would appear either that Mallory was waiting a short distance off (probably in the woods on the other side of the road, where Weldon had left the buggy), or that he had been behind hand in his appointment at the hut, and was on the way there when Weldon met him. The two young men carried the body across the three fields that lie between Smith's shanty and the road running north from Castleton. Smith gathered from the conversation between the parties that the horse and buggy was standing in the grove on the other side of the road. Smith's confession, so far as it affects the case at present, ends here, but he hinted vaguely that there was "another party" mixed up in the affair, though he refused to reveal the name.

Miss Wade's parents live at a considerable distance from where she was teaching, and did not hear of her absence for several days, and when they did learn the news it was in the shape of a rumor that she and Cope Mallory had run away. Suspicion that this was not the true state of affairs first arose from finding that the girl had left in her room all her clothes except those she had on, and her jewelry.

Castleton is a straggling little village some six or seven miles north of Colborne station, on the Grand Trunk Railway, and lying on the main road which runs north from that station through the county of Northumberland. The country in the neighborhood appears to have been settled for a good many years, and the inhabitants—including the Wade, Mallory, and Weldon families—are mostly well-to-do farmers. In a wretched little log hut, situated on the top of a hill about half a mile from the village, there has lived for many years back a person generally known in the neighborhood as "Old Dave," or who is now pretty clearly proven to have been one of the principal characters in the tragedy. "Old Dave" is about 56 years of age, and has lived in or near Castleton for the last thirty years. Ostensibly he subsisted on the wages of the odd days' work which he was accustomed to perform for the farmers around the village. He wears about as villainous a looking countenance as Providence ever hung on the front of a human being to warn the world against a scoundrel. When speaking his face is distorted into a hideous grimace, and his small, twinkling eyes peer out in a cowardly, uncertain kind of a way from beneath a pair of busy eyebrows. In fact a combination of features so indicative of low brutality is seldom met with in real life, and the "make-up" which could successfully counterfeit it on the stage would be a fortune to its wearer. Strange and startling as it may appear, this creature has borne in the neighborhood the reputation of a "professional" abortionist for years back; and that he has had a good many patients is apparent, not merely from the common talk of the country, but from his own confession and the testimony taken at the inquest, to say nothing of the still more conclusive evidence in the shape of the instruments found in his den. Unlike his brethren who operate in the large cities, he does not pretend to have even an elementary knowledge of medicine.

Some years ago his den was noted as the resort of abandoned creatures of both sexes.

MRS. PHYNETTA MILLER.
Sworn, said—I was not acquainted with Alberta Wade; never saw her to my knowledge; heard of her disappearance last Tuesday afternoon (29th May); David Smith told me he had been with Alberta Wade and had a trial upon the lady, but without effect; I cannot remember exactly when this conversation took place; it was within the last two weeks; he told me he had used an instrument, but without effect; he told me that Mallory's son had brought her to see him; he did not tell me what day it was; he told me it was done in the night in McHugh's woods, back of Castleton, opposite Smith's house; I asked who was with the lady, and he said Cope Mallory; he said he expected them back the following Friday night about midnight; he spoke of it as a business transaction, and as if he was accustomed to perform such operations; he has often spoken to me before of having performed such operations. I saw Smith operate on a young girl some years ago; I had some conversation with Marvin lately, I asked him if he heard of the death of Alberta Wade; he said "Yes;" I asked him if he thought it was true; he said he was afraid it was; Smith's trunk was brought down to my place by a little boy; I never opened it; I gave it up to the foreman of the jury; I understood from conversation with Smith that the operation was for the purpose of causing abortion; I have seen the instruments used by Smith; have seen the ones produced at Smith's; he told me one of them was for the purpose of blowing air into the womb; I do not think that was the one used upon Miss Wade; the tube covered with leather is the one used for blowing air into the womb.

The evidence of Mallory's father, mother, sister and over a dozen witnesses seemed to indicate the guilt of the arrested parties. The result of the inquest is which was adjourned till next Monday not yet made public.

Artificial-Fish Breeding.
The Belleville Intelligencer says:—We have cheering intelligence from the Trent and the upper part of the Moira, in which rivers Mr. Wilkins, our active fishery overseer, has deposited within a few years many thousands of salmon fry from the Government fish-breeding establishment at Newcastle. A considerable number of good-sized young salmon have been captured in both the rivers named, and there seems now good ground for hoping that the project of re-stocking their waters with the salmon—that most valuable of all fish—will be successful. A very large number of fry are now being distributed from the Newcastle breeding establishment, in the appointment of which we hope that the Moira and Trent will not be overlooked; and further we would suggest that if a considerable number of trout and fry could be spared for the trout creeks in this vicinity the benefit would be great. The Department ought to take action to this end.

A FATAL FIRE.

(From the Newburgh Reporter.)

On Monday night of last week, Alexander Snider, a farmer living two miles south-east of Piccadilly and about 18 miles from here, built a fire outside of his house to keep away the mosquitoes. During the hours of sleeping, the fire spread and caught in the building itself, a large frame one which was entirely consumed. Out of seven children, two aged four and eight, who were sleeping by themselves in an upper room were burned to death. One little girl who jumped from an upper window is so badly burned that recovery is doubtful. Mrs. Snider was severely injured in her attempt to rescue her children, a neighbor who assisted was also very badly burned. Loss on house $1,500 Insurance $300.

A SAD ACCIDENT.

At the athletic games at Cornwall on the Queen's Birthday, Mr. R. R. McLennan, the champion hammer thrower of the world, after repeated solicitations from a number of those present to give an exhibition of his power and skill as a hammer thrower, decided to accede to their requests. Several parties were sent out to warn the crowd to keep back, and everything being announced in readiness, Mr. McLennan took up the hammer a twelve-pounder we are informed, and after swinging around with it five or six times, sent it spinning through the air a distance of about three hundred feet. As soon as the hammer left his hand all eyes were turned in the direction in which it was going, as it was evident it would fall in the crowd at the south-west corner of the field. The people at the end of the field were seen making every effort to get out of the way, but alas! they were not all able to escape. A shriek of horror went up from the crowd when the hammer was seen alighting among them and striking a young girl. All rushed to the spot fearing that it was a daughter, sister, or some friend that had been crushed beneath the hammer. It was soon made known that the victim was a daughter of Michael Kavanaugh. The ball struck her on the back of the head completely, smashed in her skull. Those who were near by say the girl never moved a muscle after the hammer struck her. The blood poured out of her mouth, nose, eyes, and ears. She was about thirteen years of age, and had lately commenced to work in the cotton mill. She was a great help to her parents, who are poor. She was taken home by her father and uncle. Her parents have the sympathy of the public in their sad bereavement. The tears poured down poor McLennan's cheeks when he was informed that the girl was killed. Of course no blame could possible be attached to him, as he was only an actor, and the first time referred to a committee of the whole, the Reeve in the chair. The committee arose and the chairman reported the by-law with amendments. Report received and adopted. The by-law was then read a third time and passed. Moved by Mr. James, seconded by Mr. Herring, that one hundred be printed and distributed—lost on the following division—Yeas, Fradick, Herring, James, Lane, Roe, and the Mayor—6.

While the speeches were being being a lacrosse match was entered by the Sour Spring Indians and the dagas. Owing to the close contest moneys were divided, neither clubing off the prize. The war dance one of the attractions of the day.

At 7.30 p.m. about two thousand men formed in line for the torchlight procession. After marching through principal streets they proceeded to fair ground, where a magnificent display of fireworks was exhibited, thus one of the liveliest days ever seen Brantford.

The tears poured down poor McLennan's cheeks when he was informed that the girl was killed. Of course no blame could possibly be attached to him. He had not been in the habit of throwing the hammer for some years, and had very little idea of the distance or direction it would go. Had it gone in the direction that he intended, it might not have reached the crowd. We think, however, that the committee who had charge of the grounds should have made the circle larger, as it was evident to those looking on that had McLennan given the hammer that force it was in his power to do he would have sent it beyond the bounds of the circle. However, it is, but fair to the committee to state that had the spectators kept outside of the circle the accident would not have happened, as the poor girl was five or six feet inside of the rope when the hammer struck her. The chairman of the committee immediately after the accident announced that the games were closed.

American Arms for Turkey.

At the present time there are twenty-six Turkish officers at the Providence, R. I., gun factories who visit the works every day and minutely examine every gun before it is packed away to ship to Turkey. They are termed inspectors. The managing inspector, General Teofil Pasha, a prominent officer of the Turkish army, has been here ever since the contract was entered into, in accordance with the terms of the contract. The other inspectors appeal to him on all matters upon which they are in doubt as to the finish, &c., of the guns, and he in turn communicates with the Tool Company or the United States Government. There are also fifty American inspectors at the works, at the request of the Turkish Government. They are sent from the Springfield Armory by order of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance at Washington, but they are paid for their services by the Turkish Government.

THE CITY OF BRANTFORD.

ENTHUSIASTIC INAUGURAL CELEBRATION.

BRANTFORD, May 31.—Brantford today, Thursday, took its place among the cities of Ontario. The loud ringing of bells at day-break announced to the inhabitants that they had entered upon a new career in their history. After eight o'clock special trains brought thousands of visitors who had generously consented to contribute to the day's ceremonies. At each of the stations the guests were met by reception committees, and escorted to the rendezvous on the market square. When all had arrived and the arrangements of getting them in order were completed, the procession started at about 11:45 through the principal streets of the city. The entire course of the procession was made as imposing as possible by a plentiful display of flags, bunting, and other decorations. The procession was exceedingly large, containing about 2,000 firemen, and sixteen or eighteen bands of music, with several cavalry troops, and rifle brigades. The rear was brought up by the procession of trades in active operation. Most of the principal manufacturers were represented as well as the wholesale and retail houses of the city. Potters were to be seen turning their wheels and finishing up beautiful pots from the unsightly lumps of clay; cigar makers were in their glory; printing presses were pouring forth a stream of bills and small advertisements; marble-cutters, coopers, blacksmiths, carriage-makers, and many others made up a spectacle rarely seen.

When the procession had finished the round assigned for them they were conducted to the drill-shed, where an ample dinner was provided for the guests. Among those who partook of the hospitality of Brantford, besides the hundreds of firemen, were the mayors and councillors of about twenty different cities and towns. After dinner the procession reformed and marched to the fair ground, where the Mayor read the inaugural address.

After this speeches were delivered by the Mayors of Hamilton, St. Catharines, Stratford, Woodstock, Guelph, Mitchell, Tilsonburgh, and other prominent persons.

While the speeches were being belivered a lacrosse match was entered between the Sour Spring Indians and the Onondagas. Owing to the close contest the moneys were divided, neither club carrying off the prize. The war dance was one of the attractions of the day.

At 7:30 p. m. about two thousand firemen formed in line for the torchlight procession. After marching through the principal streets they proceeded to the fair ground, where a magnificent display of fireworks was exhibited, thus ending one of the liveliest days ever seen in Brantford.

THE WAR NEWS.

RUSSIA.

The Russians attacked the Turkish positions at Batoum on the 30th ult., and after an engagement of ten hours were repulsed leaving great numbers of dead and wounded.

A steam tug at Flamanada, British property, and flying the British flag, was sunk by order of the Russian commanding officer. Consul Mansfield has addressed a note to the Roumanian Government requesting an explanation.

A sharp engagement took place outside Kars recently, resulting in a decisive advantage to the Russians. The Turks lost the outlying entrenchments on three sides of Kars, with two guns, and a quantity of ammunition. The Russians lost 36 killed, and the Turks 100.

BUTCHERIES.

A Bucharest despatch says it is understood that a small detached column under selected officers, and having widely outlying objectives, will form part of the Russian scheme of operations after crossing the Danube. The Bash-Bazouks crossed the Danube between Kalarack and Jalomitca, and captured fourteen Roumanian militiamen and out of the calves of their legs.

PEACE PROSPECTS.

The semi-official Provincial Correspondence of Berlin publishes an article which, in the light of recent peace rumors from Bucharest, is significant. The article concludes as follows:—"The efforts of German policy which after the last war found expression and a firm basis in the alliance of the three Emperors, have proved also the present grave crisis to be a guarantee for specific mediation reaching far beyond that narrower alliance. If, notwithstanding the outbreak of the Russo-Turkish war, the prospects of the preservation of peace in Europe have within the last few weeks rather increased than diminished, German policy has an honorable share in this."

Bismarck hopes to bring about an understanding between England and Russia. This is rendered desirable by the strong undercurrent of active animosity in France against Germany. Germany proposes to form an alliance with Italy against Ultramontane dictation, and Bismarck is working to prevent an alliance between France, Austria, and England against the secret but well-known understanding existing between Germany and Russia.

ENGLAND.

Mr. Gladstone at Birmingham received a great ovation. Business was suspended. At the meeting in the evening 30,000 persons were present. Mr. Gladstone made a speech which consisted of an attack on the Turkish Government, but contained the same accusations as on former occasions. A resolution was unanimously passed, amid great enthusiasm, declaring that the wise and honorable policy would be for England to use her influence in conjunction with the united authority of the Great Powers to exact from Turkey effectual guarantees against the mal-treatment and oppression Christians.

In the House of Commons to-day Lord Elcho urged the Government to prepare for the eventualities of the present war. The Secretary of State for War said that although the Government maintains its forces on a peace footing it had not overlooked any possible contingency.

The departure of the Channel Squadron is indefinitely postponed. The cruise will be confined to the English coast.

TURKEY.

Lubenian Pasha, commanding the Turkish forces in Herzegovina, reports a Montenegrin marauding expedition totally destroyed. The Turks laid a mine at Riva, and by feigning a retreat tempted though it is old it is new, for history is in this respect constantly repeating itself. Mr. Hanson the Agent of the Hartford Travelers Life and Accident Company, can tell any one who will take the trouble to call upon him, many a harrowing tale illustrative of what we have written above. And as Mr. Hanson's name has been mentioned, we take the liberty to recommend him to any of our readers who are done halting between two opinions and have determined to insure their lives. Call and see him, remember his office over Coxall & Paisley's old stand, Dundas St. Napanee.

"THE AGE OF REASON."

The boy that went to the mill on horse-back, carrying the grist in one end of the bag and stone in the other, when reproved by the miller, and told to divide the grist, replied that his father and grandfather had carried it that way, and he, being no better than they, should continue to do as they did. Similar, or equally as absurd, reasons are accounted as sufficient by some to warrant them in indiscriminately condemning Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, even though there is overwhelming proof that they possess the merit claimed for them. For many years the Golden Medical Discovery has been recognized as the leading liver and blood medicine in the market. Each year has brought an increase in its sale, and it is now used throughout the civilized world. Thousand of unsolicited testimonials are on file in the Doctor's office, attesting its efficacy in overcoming aggravated coughs, colic, throat and lung affections, also scrofula, tumors, ulcers, and skin diseases. Are you suffering with some chronic malady? If so, and you wish to employ medicines that are scientifically prepared; that are refined and purified by the chemical process employed in their manufacture; that are positive in their action, and specific to the various forms of disease for the cure of which they are recommended, use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Full particulars in Pierce's Memorandum Book, kept for free distribution by all druggists.

HIP RECEPTION BY ROYALTY.

NEW YORK, June 2.—General Grant was formally introduced to the Prince of Wales yesterday, and invited by the latter to go to Epsom. At Victoria Station the Prince of Wales and Duke of Cambridge occupied a compartment with Grant. It is expected he will go to Windsor and visit Her Majesty.

NEW YORK, June 3.—The Prince of Wales gave Gen. Grant a private audience at Marlborough House yesterday, introducing him to his household. The Queen has ordered the Lord Chamberlin to extend to the General and Mrs. Grant invitations to all Court entertainments. The General was entertained at a banquet at Apsley House by the Duke of Wellington last night.

LONDON, June 4.—Gen. Grant attended services at Westminster Abbey yesterday, and listened to a sermon by Dean Stanley. After alluding to the great and irreparable loss two kindred nations had sustained in the decease of Mr. Motley, the reverend gentleman, in the course of his sermon, said General Grant has just laid down the sceptre of the American commonwealth after having by military powers, and still more by the generous treatment of his comrades in victory and his enemies in defeat, restored unity to a great and divided people. England welcomes him as a sign and pledge that the two nations of Anglo-Saxon race are still one in heart and spirit.

SUICIDE OF A CLERGYMAN

The Rev. W. R. Morden, a Baptist Church Minister, suicided with a revolver in the street in London Ont. at noon on the 1st inst. On the person of the deceased were found certain writings, among which were the following sentences:—"Almighty and everlasting God, my Heavenly Father, accept the sacrifice unto The I bring, and let Thy wrathful indignation pass away from an entire world, and especially from Thine ancient spouse, the Catholic Church, and give all repentance unto life; a sacrifice not only for mine own sins but for the errors of all of the people." "And unto him he said, behold I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee. Zach. iii. 4. "Because I lay down my life that I might take it again no man taketh it from me, but I lay it down, and I have power to take it again." This commandment have I received from my Father. John x., 17-18." Another sentence was to the effect that his body should not be buried: And that a certain ring should not be removed from his finger. An inquest was held when a verdict was rendered of suicide while in a fit of temporary insanity. Morden had a sunstroke ten years ago from which he never entirely recovered.

The Prince of Wales and the Licensed Victuallers.

At the annual dinner of the Licensed Victuallers held in London (Eng.) a few days since the Prince of Wales was in the chair, and in the course of the few remarks in which he acknowledged the customary loyal toasts, he said—"I may state that during the last two or three days I have received some two hundred petitions from various parts of the United Kingdom relative to my attendance here this evening. Of course I don't wish to say a word to disparage these societies, which no doubt have excellent objects in view, but I think in this instance they have overshot the mark. The object of our meeting here to night is not to encourage the love of drink, but rather to support a good and excellent charity. I can only say I am sure that all here will agree with me that no one had more at heart the interests of his adopted country a great ovation. Business was suspended. At the meeting in the evening 30,000 persons were present. Mr. Gladstone made a speech which consisted of an attack on the Turkish Government, but contained the same accusations as on former occasions. A resolution was unanimously passed, amid great enthusiasm, declaring that the wise and honourable policy would be for England to use her influence in conjunction with the united authority of the Great Powers to exact from Turkey effectual guarantees against the mal-treatment and oppression Christians.

In the House of Commons to-day Lord Elcho urged the Government to prepare for the eventualities of the present war. The Secretary of State for War said that although the Government maintains its forces on a peace footing it had not overlooked any possible contingency.

The departure of the Channel Squadron is indefinitely postponed. The cruise will be confined to the English coast.

TURKEY.

Lubenian Pasha, commanding the Turkish forces in Herzegovina, reports a Montenegrin marauding expedition totally destroyed. The Turks laid a mine at Riva, and by feigning a retreat tempted the Montenegrins to follow, when the mine was fired and the Montenegrins all killed.

NIKOPOLIS, May 26.—There was a brisk engagement near here yesterday between a Turkish ironclad and the Russian fortifications. The Turks destroyed the earthworks and the enemy retreated leaving forty dead on the field.

How Long Halt Ye Between two Opinions.

Indecision is not always a fault; it is often simply a misfortune. There are ever and anon, problems presented to the understanding which are too much for its feeble powers: and in such cases the more judiciously-minded a man, the more conscientiously intent he is upon being right in his conclusion, the more likely is he to be kept in a state of suspense. But whether suspense comes from fault or from misfortune, whether it is the result of unwillingness, or inability to see the truth, it is full of misery and peril. Even in matter of speculation it is not pleasant to be undecided; but it is in regard to practical questions that the greater danger attaches to this state of mind. It is when a man ought to act when there is barely sufficient time for him to do what is imperatively required to be done and he either cannot or will not see precisely what is required of him that the greatest misery and the greatest danger lies.

Upon the higher possible illustration of this truth we cannot here enter. We dare not invade the province of the preacher. There are other matters than matters of religion upon which it is possible for us to be painfully and dangerously undecided, and there are other interests than the highest interests of the soul which may be imperilled by the unhappy state of mind. An undecided man is seldom a successful man in anything. The men who see their way, at a glance and maket up their minds with the least possible delay, and are therefore prepared to act, while others are only thinking about it have a great advantage in the battle of life. They act with a promptness, and usually with an energy, which seldom fail of success, while the undecided man allows the opportunity to pass by unimproved.

Illustrations of this are of daily occurrence and are to be found all around us. But there is just one to which the space at our disposal will allow us to refer at present. It is one to which we have

Another who has had ASTHMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Rufus Robinson, of Nunda, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ELECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." Rev. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ELECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

In a similar spirit of good natured reproof, Lord Granville remarked that he had been solemnly warned not to risk his popularity by publicly associating himself with those monsters of iniquity the Licensed Victuallers, and had replied that, in any case, he should attend the dinner, if it were only to see three hundred monsters of iniquity pleasantly assembled together to promote a work of genuine charity and benevolence.

Illustrations of this are of daily occurrence and are to be found all around us. But there is just one to which the space at our disposal will allow us to refer at present. It is one to which we have frequently had occasion to refer before and to which we may have occasion to invest again. There are hundreds of persons who have had the matter of life and accident insurance before their minds for years, they have turned the subject over and over, again and again, but they have not done anything, because, they say, they have not made up their minds. They have not decided the question, and in the absence of decision there has been no action.

Now what has been the result? In scores of instances in our neighborhood men have been prostrated by painful and disabling accidents for weeks, in some instances for months, during which they have spent the savings of years, when they might just as well had full indemnity for every hour of time they lost, at a very trifling expense. And what is still worse than this, scores and hundreds have died and left their families unprovided for, from the same cause, and perhaps the most painful cases of all are those who find themselves fatally diseased, unmistakably marked as the victims of death, and while they are wasting away under the power of disease, they have their suffering augmented by the better reflection that this weakness and indecision have provided them from making the only provision for themselves and those dependent upon them which was in their power, by availing themselves of the advantages of life insurance. We are well aware that this is an old story; but

THE WAR NEWS.

RUSSIA.
Russians attacked the Turkish ships at Batoum on the 30th ult., after an engagement of ten were repulsed leaving great numbers dead and wounded.

A Russian tug at Flamanca, British property and flying the British flag, was in order of the Russian commander. Consul Mansfield has addressed a note to the Roumanian Government requesting an explanation.

An engagement took place outside recently, resulting in a decisive advantage to the Russians. The Turks lost their entrenchments on three Karas, with two guns, and a quantity of ammunition. The Russians killed, and the Turks 100.

BUTCHERIES.
The latest despatch says it is understood that a small detached column under officers, and having widely outposts, will form part of the scheme of operations after crossing the Danube. The Bashis-Bazouks the Danube between Kalarack and Iomitea and captured fourteen Russian militiamen and out of the hands of their legs.

PEACE PROSPECTS.
The semi-official Provincial Correspondent publishes an article which, in light of recent peace rumors from Berlin, is significant. The article is as follows:—"The efforts of policy which after the last war expression and a firm basis in the of the three Emperors, have also the present grave crisis to be met for pacific mediation reach beyond that narrower alliance. Withstanding the outbreak of the Turkish war, the prospects of the of peace in Europe have the last few weeks rather increased. German policy has a share in this."

It is hoped to bring about an understanding between England and Russia is rendered desirable by the undercurrent of active animosity against Germany. Germany is to form an alliance with Italy, Ultramontane dictation, and Bismarck working to prevent an alliance between France, Austria, and England. The secret but well-known understanding existing between Germany and though it is old it is new, for history is in this respect constantly repeating itself. Mr. Hanson the Agent of the Hartford Travelers Life and Accident Company, can tell any one who will take the trouble to call upon him, many a harrowing tale illustrative of what we have written above. And as Mr. Hanson's name has been mentioned, we take the liberty to recommend him to any of our readers who are done halting between two opinions and have determined to insure their lives. Call and see him, remember his office over Coxall & Paisley's old stand, Dundas St. Napanee.

The boy that went to the mill on horse-back, carrying the grist in one end of the bag and a stone in the other, when reproved by the miller, and told to divide the grist, replied that his father and grandfather had carried it that way, and he, being no better than they, should continue to do as they did. Similar, or equally as absurd, reasons are accounted as sufficient by some to warrant them in indiscriminately condemning Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, even though there is overwhelming proof that they possess the merit claimed for them. For many years the Golden Medical Discovery has been recognized as the leading liver and blood medicine in the market. Each year has brought an increase in its sale, and it is now used throughout the civilized world. Thousand of unsolicited testimonials are on file in the Doctor's office, attesting its efficacy in overcoming aggravated coughs, catarrhs, throat and lung affections, also scrofula, tumors, ulcers, and skin diseases. Are you suffering with some chronic malady? If so, and you wish to employ medicines that are scientifically prepared; that are refined and purified by the chemical process employed in their manufacture; that are positive in their action, and specific to the various forms of disease for the cure of which they are recommended, use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Full particulars in Pierce's Memorandum Book, kept for free distribution by all druggists.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

A VIEW OF KANSAS, BY A SETTLER.

(To the Editor of The Globe.)

SIR.—If the result of my ten years' experience here could possibly be placed before your readers, I am satisfied it would be far more profitable to many of them than it has been to me. Let any one visit Kansas in June, and he might justly call it "the prettiest country under the sun." Yet Kansas in summer is but a flirting gay coquette, suffused with flowers, and smiles, and sweetest promises that captivate men's hearts, and rob them of their better judgement—till when they go to gather autumn fruits, and then they only find the sere and yellow leaves of bitter disappointment. Kansas to-day has much spare corn, but it is a feast or famine all the time. I have sold it for ten cents a bushel one year and bought it another year for $2.50. Perhaps some of your readers will will say, why did you not keep your corn? But let them live here awhile, and they will find an answer for themselves. Lots of money has been made in Kansas, but I never knew a farmer make it except by trading; honest farming does not pay. Kansas is valuable chiefly as a grazing country, and in this respect it loses value year by year. A few years ago people came here with a rush, thinking that all they needed to make them rich was merely to invert prairie sod. But they made a big mistake, and now I see abandoned farms all around me, and the evils of prairie breaking more apparent everywhere. Some time ago I had a talk with one of my most intelligent and thrifty neighbours, who has been here since '57 and who, by the way, has been paying interest at 15 per cent. for the last four years; and he told me he would willingly give $5 an acre to have his farm back to prairie-grass again, and that he had paid hundreds of dollars to seed it down, and always failed.

In wet seasons like last year and this, tame grass does well enough; but the very first drouth or grasshopper raid makes all black ground again.

Since I came here in 1867 I have seen four crops of wheat winter-killed, and this is the fifth season we have "hoppers." The same gentleman and I concluded that the average of all our crops for the last ten years—counting all the failures—would run about as follows:—Fall wheat, per acre, about 4 bushels; spring, 5 or 6; rye, 16; oats, 20; flax, 6; barley, 15; corn, 25; potatoes, 35; garden stuffs, about once in three years; peaches about the same; and apples something oftener, but few in number.

It is rare to find a farm here that is not mortgaged, and capitalists have things all their own way. They first get our money and now they have got our land, and the probabilities are they will find their hands full yet. Grasshoppers get blamed for more than they deserve, while other things are seldom mentioned. The fact is this is a perfect nest of insects. But by far the greatest enemy we have to fear is the hot south wind that commences to blow generally in June, and sometimes continues like a monsoon for many weeks, killing vegetation, parching the ground, bringing malaria and hosts of bugs, and grubs, and many other evils in its train. And then, apart from all these drawbacks, there are other things that some of your readers who are grown weary of the axe and handspike would not like. But I shall only name a few. They would not like our Sabbath, and they would not like our churches; they would not like our day school, and they would not like our teachers; they would not like our law courts, and they would not like our judges, they would not like our sleepy disregard of law, and they would not like our vigilances; they might not like our marriages, and certainly

CHARLES D. BLAKE & Co's..

Grand Square and Upright Piano-Forte

JOHN N. LAZIER,
BELLEVILLE,

General Agent for the Dominion of Georgia

ed. In wet seasons like last year and this, tame grass does well enough; but the very first drouth or grasshopper raid makes all black ground again.

Since I came here in 1867 I have seen four crops of wheat winter-killed, and this is the fifth season we have 'hoppers'. The same gentleman and I concluded that the average of all our crops for the last ten years—counting all the failures—would run about as follows:—Fall wheat, per acre, about 4 bushels; spring, 5 or 6; rye, 16; oats, 20; flax, 6; barley, 15; corn, 25; potatoes, 35; garden stuffs, about once in three years; peaches about the same; and apples something oftener, but few in number.

It is rare to find a farm her that is not mortgaged, and capitalists have things all their own way. They first get our money and now they have got our land, and the probabilities are they will find the hands full yet. Grasshoppers get blamed for more than they deserve, while other things are seldom mentioned. The fact is this is a perfect nest of insects. But by far the greatest enemy we have to fear is the hot south wind that commences to blow generally in June, and sometimes continues like a monsoon for many weeks, killing vegetation, parching the ground, bringing malaria and hosts of bugs, and grubs, and many other evils in its train. And then, apart from all these drawbacks, there are other things that some of your readers who are grown weary of the axe and handspike would not like. But I shall only name a few. They would not like our Sabbath, and they would not like our churches; they would not like our day school, and they would not like our teachers; they would not like our law courts, and they would not like our judges, they would not like our sleepy disregard of law, and they would not like our vigilances; they might not like our marriages, and certainly would not like our divorces; they would not like to see the poor industrious, honest man debased, nor would they like to see the scoundrel, though rich, exalted; they would not like our outward gaudy brag, nor would they like our hollow inward emptiness; they would not like our shabby straw-roofed farm buildings, and they would not like our fences; they would not like our horses, and they would not like our sheep; nor would they think that the busy hum of the good old spinning wheel was fully compensated by the crawling tones of a mortgaged organ; they would not like our war debts, and they would not like our taxes; they would not be satisfied unless they knew how things went on at Washington, and still less so when they had found out; they would very naturally expect to know all about our politics by living among our people, and would be quite surprised when they found they had to send for the Toronto Globe to teach them what was going on around them; and if they lived far out on the distant treeless prairie in a damp and miserable "dug out," with nothing to make a fire, and saw themselves and all their families down sick, and so helpless, that perhaps not one could go for a draught of water, if such be worthy of the name, at such a time, I apprehend, they might well wish themselves safe back again to the woods of Canada, or back again to their dear old homes in Merry England, or back again to "Scotia's strand." The.

"Land of brown heath and shaggy wood, Land of the mountain and the flood."

Nor at such a time would they be likely to receive much comfort from a visit from some of the sons of Uncle Sam who generally considers it a virtue as well as a duty to curse "Old Johnnie Bull." But there is yet another reason which I must not omit. Old Country folks in general never becomes fully Americanized, they are too slow. The Americans say they are too stupid, but this is not where the matter lies, either, and if I may be allowed to give my opinion on this I would say, it is because they are too honest.

Americanizing means sharpening up, and it means whittling one down to the very keenest point of polished, brazen impudence, if not rascality itself. And naturally they are not shrewd enough for this, they have not got it in them, and it would never pay to learn it. And if I have any advice worth given them, I would say stay where you are, and where you always feel at home, and go on with the work of building up your great Dominion, and consider if the highest honor and privilege to live and die beneath that flag on which I hope the sun may never set; never forgetting that it is righteousness alone that exalteth a nation; and wherever you find God most highly honored, there you will find that men are most respected, and by far the happiest, and therefore richest.

HOW TO AVOID DRUNKENNESS.

If you would keep from drinking so great a quantity of ardent spirits, eat. Eat more. Eat nutritious food. Eat some thing whenever you take a drink. The drunk in all cases comes from the stomach full of whiskey and not food. There is a simple lesson yet to be learned by many, and that is they do not eat enough of real blood, bone nerve and tissue-making food. You may half starve to death on salt fish, potatoes, cabbage, turnips, fried liver, stewed kidney, and a score of other dishes which please the taste, but add little or nothing to the body force. Eggs, the best of steak, mutton and bread are what one requires for strength. It is this unconscious, half-starved condition which causes so much of the craving for a temporary increase of strength, and that is quickest gained whiskey through a glass of whiskey. That gives for a few moments a spasmodic impulse to the wheels of life, sending them whizzing and spinning around for a few moments; then comes the reaction, and they turn more sluggishly than ever. The best spirits in the world reside in good blood, the worst in bad. It is that which sends false imaginations, suspicious and despondencies to the drain.—Graphic.

The Graphic's Paris special says France is trembling on the verge of revolution. It may take the form of a coup d'etat by MacMahon, or the seizure of the President by the Republicans, and his trial as a traitor to the Constitution. The Journal des Debats says France has made a retrograde movement, in which the efforts of four years for the advancement of the Republic have been lost.

The Kingston British Whig says:—The elevators were busily employed on Saturday until midnight by the M. T. Company, in consequence of the rush of grain vessels awaiting discharge. Garden Island presents a busy scene, too, a very large fleet of timber vessels having passed through the canal consigned to Messrs. Calvin & Breck. Whatever may be the prospects of the grain trade we cannot say; but we are satisfied that the timber trade will be attended with unusual results.

The coroner's jury on the Rockford, Ill., Court House disaster found Architect Gay, through neglect to provide for the great amount of weight called for to complete the building according to his plans, guilty of the deaths of the deceased; that the Board of Supervisors failed to use the necessary caution in examining the plans and specifications, and acted unwisely in not employing a competent architect to superintend its construction.

Cobourg, May 25. Father Timlin, Roman Catholic parish priest of Cobourg, was buried here this morning. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of people of all denominations, amongst whom were several Protestant ministers of the town. The funeral services were conducted by Bishop O'Brien, of Kingston assisted by nineteen parish priests belonging to the diocese. Father Timlin has been for thirty-three years parish priest of Cobourg. He was universally respected by all denominations for his consistent Christian deportment and his genial and kindly disposition towards all.

The celebrated author of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

For the information of Christian generally, it may be briefly stated that this Institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, TRACTS, BOOKS, &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CUTLER.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books to persons and places where they are needed as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to help in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others who may be added), who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.
